For instance, it seems an ever-increasing number of persons are hurt in getting on or off cars—mostly off.

CAUSES OF INJURIES.

By far the largest number of injuries reported is of persons entering and leaving cars. The worst of it is that passengers seem to be getting more careless right along.

From January to May of last year, on the city railway lines, thirteen men and two women were injured while boarding cars. For the same period this year twenty-five men and four women were hurt through the same cause.

Last year, in the months named, twenty-four men and forty-nine women were hurt while alighting; this year the reports show fifty-one men and fifty-seven women.

Wagons and other horse-drawn vehicles are getting more and more in the way. In the period chosen for comparison, thirty-three such vehicles were struck last year; this year the number was sixty-four.

Thirty-three persons were struck by cars of the city lines in the months named last year; the total leaped to forty-five this year. Of the former number the fatalities were two. Only one died from that cause for the period just closed.

sult from collisions of cars. These juries were few in number last and showed no increase this year.

If cars can collide without k and maiming passengers, the rail companies are satisfied, but it hard with the car crews responsibl such accidents.

The fact that city cars on many are obliged to climb and descend hills, with cars at right angles run at the base, and that, even under conditions, collisions are few, tell own story.

OH, BUT THE AUTOS!

But what a record the automobiles making!

Time was when these mach traveled at so slow a pace that often were crowded off the track street cars.

Now the worm has turned and auto is endeavoring to put the ca the ditch.

In four months last year eight a mobiles were struck by city cars, w two cars were struck by autos.

This year for the same period th five autos were hit by cars, but what the autos did to the cars—ching wagons bumped into tr coaches!

Still, in the entire list of accid there has been hardly a personal jury of serious consequence, tho the claim agents of the compa might tell a different tale, for the of damage suits never stops grow generous citizen having come ward with an offer of a close-in the National Guard Armory will built in Agricultural Park. This ement was made last night by t.-Col. Follmer, and work on the ding will be begun as soon as plans ared tentatively are accepted by Armory Board, which is composed Adjt.-Gen. Lauck, Gen. Wankowski, Bradbury, Col. Wilhelm and Col. .

had been hoped by the officers of Seventh Regiment that a site town would be secured, but this been abandoned, and the regiment w figuring on the advantages that be gained by building the new ory in Agricultural Park, the 's fine property, on which splen- improvements will be made.

"N'T QUITE SO HANDY."

t will be a little out of the way, quite so handy as downtown," said lieutenant-colonel, "but, then, we have lots of room for outdoor ts, and that is what will bring the y out. We can have a baseball dia- d, football grounds, and room for other open-air diversions, all of h will make membership in the ment still more desirable. It has proven that the mere honor of nging to the regiment and the llege of attending drills does not e a sufficient inducement for en- ment in the National Guard to as- full commands. We have now t the same membership that we when the city was not nearly so e. Making a club of the armory do wonders to bring in new men, the boys will be quite as ready to Agricultural Park as to any r place. The only inconvenience is it will take a little more time t there."

e plans have not been finished for mission to the Armory Board, but officers have in mind an arrange- t which would give large and com- dable quarters to the sixteen local ary organizations in the city, in ding to a roomy dance hall, serv- ble range, and a spacious drill .

is contemplated to rear a building a 90-foot facade and a depth of et. The front, three stories high fifty feet deep, would contain the e, assembly-rooms, etc., on the lower floors, while a large ball- would be on the top floor. In the ory now in use the ballroom and oms are one, and the constant ging of rifle butts on the floor has e it rather hard for dancing. The om in the new armory will be for dancing only.

ASPHALT FOR DRILL FLOOR.

Standing 200 feet from this front ion of the proposed structure, with dth of 100 feet, will be the drill- , on the ground floor, paved with halt. This part of the building will ve stories high, and the drillroom be open all the way to the roof, h a gallery around it opening into rooms on the second floor.

On either side of the drillroom will eight company rooms, twenty-five wide and fifty feet deep. Immedi- ly over these will be locker rooms the same size, communicating di- y with the company rooms by as y stairways, so that members will have to go out of their way to h the lockers from the rooms be- . This will house twelve full com- ies of infantry, the signal corps, regimental band, the troop of cav- and a company of artillery.

"We have $150,000 on hand now," Lieut.-Col. Follmer. "That would be enough to finish the armory, we propose, if the plans are ac- ed, to begin work at once on the walls, depending upon the Legis- e appropriating more money at next session for the completion of building."

Lieut. Brown and Sergt. R. E. Ben- of Co. A, Signal Corps, are at work entative plans, carrying out ideas ested by Gen. Wankowski.

CAMP BY REGIMENTS.

ere will be no general encampment the National Guard of California summer. The regiments will camp rately. This is in accordance with icy established in coöperation with War Department. Every two years State troops go into camp with regulars for the study and prac- of army maneuvers. These maneu- s are held at Atascadero. Only ed troops participate in them. tional guardsmen who have been in service under three months are not n in these camps. No recruits, ever, are barred from the regi- tal camps. Men enlisted up to the last day are taken along.

he Seventh Regiment will go into p from July 20 to 31, either at Re- o Beach or Venice, Col. Schreiber not yet decided which. There are rounds large enough at either place regimental maneuvers, and the only practice in such drills can be se- d is by deploying over the hills, ch would necessitate absence from p for one night. For this reason camp routine will probably be con- d to close order drills, guard drills, the study of camp sanitation. Ex- ded order drills will be given as far the grounds selected will permit.

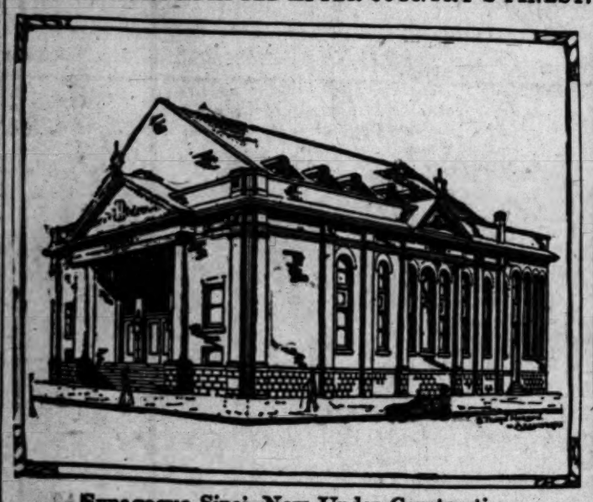
TEMPLE HERE ADAPTED AFTER COUNTRY'S FINEST.



Synagogue Sinai, Now Under Construction.

This building will cost about thirty-five thousand dollars, and is at Valencia and Twelfth streets.

Construction work on the Synagogue Sinai, Twelfth and Valencia streets, is progressing rapidly, and within three weeks the corner-stone will be placed in position with appropriate public ceremonial. The building is expected to be ready for occupancy by September 1, when the Jewish New Year holidays are celebrated. Rabbi Isadore Meyer is in direct charge of the work.

The new building is adapted after the plans of the famous New York Temple Anshe Chesed, the largest and most expensive synagogue in this country. Synagogue Sinai will be of Grecian design with Ionic columns in the portico, which will be of artificial stone construction. The main structure will be built of red pressed brick. The auditorium will have a seating capacity of 600, and a balcony will seat 200 more. In the rear of this will be class, assembly, choir and study rooms. The pipe organ will be located over the pulpit, and the main entrance to the building will be on Twelfth street. It will cost between $30,000 and $35,000 when completed.

ARCHITECT SUGGESTS.

plans, etc., in order that the proper grade could be obtained for having the station all on the ground floor. Part of this money was spent in elevating the tracks, through the city proper.

The new Chicago and Northwestern Terminal two-story station (Frost & Granger, architects,) now building on Madison street, between Canal and Clinton streets, Chicago, is no doubt the type of building that Los Angeles will have to have, for sooner or later it seems certain that the railroads and the city will have to mutually agree on the elevated tracks.

Therefore, we might assume, for the sake of argument, that the most logical place for such a building would be on the site of the present Arcade station, with its proposed boulevard approach, as suggested for the city in the expert report of Charles Mulford Robinson.

WHAT WE MIGHT HAVE.

As a suggestion for such a building, we would propose that the ground floor be devoted, as far as possible, to the accommodation of the ticket offices and baggage-rooms, also the mail and express quarters, as well as certain offices of the Union Pacific Station Corporation.

At either end of the building there could be carriage entrances, while opposite the main entrance, and vestibule, should be the grand staircase leading to the main waiting rooms, the passenger concourse, etc., of the upper or track level floor. Other staircases, elevators, telegraph and telephone booths, news stands and parcel rooms would be found on this the ground, or vestibule floor, while overhead the main waiting room should be as imposing in proportions as well as attractive in appearance as the use of appropriate constructive materials can make it. It should be amply lighted by great lunette windows at the ends and sides. In fact, in a room of that kind, a few well chosen sculptures, or other works of art, could be placed without occasioning any adverse criticisms.

Adjoining the main waiting room, there should be the main dining and lunch rooms, the ladies' waiting rooms, and retiring rooms, as well as a children's or nurse room, with suitable attendants in charge. Toilet rooms, news stands, etc., would also be accomodated on this floor.

MAIN FEATURE OF PLAN.

Beyond the main waiting room, and connected directly with it is the main feature of the plan, the great passenger concourse, which, in the case of the new station at Washington, is 760 feet long by 130 feet wide. This leads directly, through a fencing separating the incoming and outgoing passengers, to the tracks. Electric elevators are here found for accommodation of baggage, etc., from the floor below.

Further out and alongside the tracks could be other elevators for similar purposes if required in future, and even staircases to street crossings below, for the accommodation of the suburban traffic in case that should develop into the propositions required by the Chicago Terminal station.

The space below the tracks or out beyond the station, and in between the cross streets, could be readily made use of for carriage, cab or automobile stands, storage and trainmen's quarters.

The construction of such a building should be, naturally, of steel frame, with granite exterior walls, and the interior throughout of dull glaze, matte surface terra cotta in polychrome colorings. The floors of Vermont marble-tile. The style should be of the classic or Renaissance.

CLASSIC PAVILION.

The architects of the Washington Union Station took as a suggestion for its central pavilion (or motif,) the Roman Arch of Constantine the Great, with the proportions increased, and typifying, as it did, the colossal gateway of a great city. Albany's Union Station has a similar facade, while the Chicago Terminal has the colonade.

The entrance arches of the Washington Station are 30 feet wide by 50 feet high, while the waiting-room beyond them is 220 feet long by 130 feet deep and 90 feet high. Thirty-three tracks enter the station, and while the building was practically built and is owned by the Pennsylvania and the Baltimore and Ohio railroads (known as the Washington Terminal Company,) still, by act of Congress, it is to accommodate all the other roads, some five or six in all, that enter the city of Washington.

The station, which is, architecturally speaking, in character with the Capitol building, faces the Capitol and is about half a mile distant therefrom, and the space between is to be boulevarded and parked in an appropriate manner.

LITERARY CLUB MEMBERS GIVE MINSTREL SHOW.

Very Large Audience Delighted by Performance — Redondo Boosters Arouse Enthusiasm—Packing-house Forces Reduced Because Eastern Markets Are Glutted.

[STAFF CORRESPONDENCE OF THE TIMES.]

UPLAND, May 22.—"Miranda's Minstrels," given by the members of the Woman's Literary Club, attracted a very large audience to the Auditorium. The ladies acquitted themselves splendidly, and proved that they are not afraid of burnt cork.

The Trustees have decided not to appoint a City Attorney, and passed a resolution to employ Attorney Ralph Swing of San Bernardino to act as the legal representative of the city for a term of twelve months, at a salary of $360. The board also overcame the deadlock regarding the selection of a fifth member to that body by electing Joseph D. Wilson. He has resided here only a few months, but is said to be very progressive.

Mrs. Delia Bergon of this city has completed the serving of her jail sentence of ninety days at the county seat, and was released from custody yesterday. She has returned to her home.

Mrs. Bertha, wife of A. M. Curran, died Thursday evening, after a prolonged illness, of heart disease, complicated with other ailments. The funeral will be held Monday at the Methodist Church, at 2 p.m. Rev. Dr. A. C. Welch will officiate. Besides a widower, Mrs. Curran leaves two young children.

BOOSTERS CAUSE STIR.

The Redondo "Boosters Brigade" was here yesterday, and stirred up a good deal of enthusiasm. The visitors were entertained by the Men's Club.

The Korean boys' class of the Presbyterian Sunday-school entertained members of the church and school at a social this evening.

The material reduction in prices for California oranges in the markets of the East has resulted in reductions in the working forces at a number of the packing-houses here. One reason assigned for the drop in prices is the glutting of all the eastern markets. The continued cool weather is favorable to the longer holding of the navels, and better figures are hoped for soon. There is still a large amount of fruit to go forward.

The work of opening East Ninth street, through to the Cucamonga road, is under way.

Juan Regulado, who was arrested here for violation of the ordinance forbidding the pasturage of horses on public highways, was fined $10 today.

N. T. Franklin has sold to S. V. Benson a five-acre orange grove on West Tenth street, for $3250.

The California Vintage Company has been organized at Cucamonga, and nearly all the grape growers of that section have signified their intention of taking stock in the concern, which is capitalized at $100,000. Incorporators and directors are: J. B. Lafourcade, A. J. Falder, W. H. DeBerard, F. A. Lucas and George D. Haven. It is probable that a winery will be built at West Cucamonga, on the south side of the Santa Fé's tracks.

Two hundred orange trees, shipped from Pasadena to Cucamonga, were The consignee was obliged to strip the trees of leaves, and to wash them with whale oil soap. This is an instance of the care which is used in San Bernardino county to guard against fruit pests. It is hoped that this district will soon be supplied with nursery stock locally.

Post & Klusman, extensive grape growers near Etiwanda, contemplate the erection of a grape-juice factory at West Cucamonga. The plant will probably be erected on the George Klusman lot.

THREE-DAY MAY FESTIVAL.

Parishioners of Church of Our Lady of Loretto Arrange Interesting Programmes.

Parishioners of the Church of Our Lady of Loretto, at the corner of Court and Union streets, will hold a May festival in Loretto Hall the last three days of this week.

The opening exercises will take place on Thursday evening, when the chief speakers will be J. W. Carrigan, Joseph Scott and Rev. George Donahue. The choir of the church will render Gounod's "Gallia," accompanied by the Stuart orchestra. A quartette, consisting of Messrs. Fox, Howard, Durnerin and Heyes, will render several numbers, and there will be selections by Gabriel Durnerin, Miss Louise Vollinger and Miss Europa Davi.

Friday evening the programme will include a guitar duet, "The Romance of L'Eclaire," by the Misses Ethel L. Olcott and Hazel Henderson; character songs by J. Park Jones and the Misses Myrtle and Stella Gonzalez, and a piano solo by Miss Julia Otten.

Saturday afternoon will be devoted to the children. A prize baby show has been arranged for, and all youngsters under the age of 3 may be entered. In the evening Spanish music will be rendered by Grace Larieux, Mrs. M. Gonzales and Mario David and children of the parish will present a musical comedy, "The Baseball Game." Preceding the entertainments each evening dinner will be served. The first will consist of French dishes, the second of fish, and the last will be a Spanish feast.

BAKER'S INDECENT ACTS.

Insults Little Girls and Stands Undressed in Their Sight—Mob Law Threatened.

Thirty women living in the neighborhood of the Vernon and McKinley schools were in Justice Williams's court, yesterday morning, to complain of the indecent actions of J. G. Young, a baker of No. 1038 East Fifty-second Place.

It was stated by officers, yesterday, that Young will be mobbed by the indignant citizens if he repeats his acts. According to the testimony, the baker made insulting remarks to little girls and removing some of his garments, stood in a small alley, near his bakery, so that the children might see him.

He has a wife and three children and because they would suffer if his support was withdrawn, the justice was lenient and gave him a suspended sentence of six months.

OLIVER'S BODY EN ROUTE.

A telegram received from El Paso yesterday by Harry Harrington of this city conveyed the information that the body of Byron L. Oliver, who died a week ago in the interior of Mexico, will reach Los Angeles at 7 o'clock this evening over the Southern Pacific. Mrs. Oliver accompanies the remains, and it is believed that Thomas Hughes and wife, with whom Mr. and Mrs. Oliver were traveling, also are members of the returning party. Relatives and friends of Mr. Oliver will meet the train bearing the body.

PASSENGER TRAIN CUTS HOSE.

Paint Company's and Other Plants in Danger of Burning for Time. Loss Small.

M. McCormick, a driver in Company No. 2, of the Fire Department, was burned, yesterday morning, and W. Smiley, an employé of the Green-Marshall Paint Company, suffered an injury to his left hand while trying to extinguish flames in the varnish rooms of the paint concern's plant at No. 1313 East Fifteenth street.

When varnish in a kettle caught fire, setting in a blaze the small room, an alarm was sent and employés formed a bucket brigade. The entire plant and neighboring factories were in danger because of the high wind. When the department arrived, a line of hose was stretched across the Southern Pacific tracks at Alameda street, but a passenger train cut it in two. More hose

NATION'S GRATITUDE.

SOLDIERS' HOME ELIGIBILITY.

RULES GOVERNING ENTRY TO THE INSTITUTION.

Officers Receive Many Inquiries Concerning Conditions Under Which Veterans of the Civil War and of Indian Campaigns May Become Members.

Eligibility for admission to the Soldiers' Home and other kindred matters concerning the institution are subjects of inquiries which frequently reach Home officers. For the information of the inquirers generally the following extract is, by courtesy of Col. T. J. Cochrane, governor, obtained from the laws and regulations governing the National Home for Disabled Volunteer Soldiers.

Article II, paragraph 83: "The following persons, only, are entitled to the benefits of the National Home for Disabled Volunteer Soldiers, and may be admitted thereto upon the order of a member of the board of managers; namely: All honorably discharged officers, soldiers and sailors who served in the regular or volunteer forces of the United States in any war in which the country has been engaged, including the Spanish-American War, the provisional army (authorized by act of Congress approved March 3, 1899,) and in any of the campaigns with hostile Indians, who are disabled by disease, wounds or otherwise, and who have no adequate means of support, are not otherwise provided for by law, and by reason of such disability are incapable of earning their living."

statute books, paragraphs in the Home regulations are, in some instances, found to be lacking in that lucidity for the average mind. Analysis often furnishes interpretation to a clause or term other than that perceived in a casual perusal of the paragraph. So it is with the foregoing quoted paragraph in reference to Indian campaigns.

At the time of the establishment of the National Home, the paragraph, corresponding to that referred to, provided that those only were entitled to admission who had served in the Mexican War, the Civil War and in Indian wars. The subjugation of the Seminole tribe and of the Black Hawk Indians were the only instances wherein trouble with Indians had at that time, or since has, attained to the dignity and title of "war." The chase after the truant Apaches which terminated in the capture of Chief Geronimo, and the uprising of the Sioux, which culminated in the massacre of Custer and his command, and many similar troubles, which exacted frequent battles and all other hardships of war, are officially designated "campaigns" only.

Any soldier or sailor who served in the United States Army or navy during the legally prescribed existence of the Civil War is—provided he received an honorable discharge and is otherwise qualified—entitled to benefits of the Soldiers' Home. He may not at any time have been nearer to the seat of war than the navy yard at New York, or the Presidio at San Francisco; but, a person who, having enlisted subsequent to the close of the Civil War, bases his claim to benefits of the Home on service in an Indian campaign, must furnish proof of personal participation in that campaign. If, for instance, a soldier belonged to a command stationed at a frontier army post, and a detachment of that command should receive orders to repair to a distant point for the purpose of quelling an Indian disturbance, and were he of the portion of the command which remained at the post, he would not be in position to prove actual service in that campaign.

another feature worthy of note. Persons residing at distant points very often without previous notice come to the Home with the expectation that they will be at once admitted, only for some reason to meet with disappointment. Speaking of these, Gov. Cochrane said:

"I wish this advice could be given the widest possible publicity, that veterans, especially those living at any great distance from the Home, who contemplate making application for admission, could be made to understand that the safer course is for each to first write to headquarters, making known his desire to be considered an applicant. An answer will be promptly returned to him, giving full information as to the requirements before he is to present himself for admission. The applicant may, in this way, be saved from possible disappointment, and this office from much useless waste of time and from other annoyances."

Much space would be required for the enumeration at length of various reasons for rejection of applicants. Among these is most frequently lack of evidence that the applicant is the person he represents himself to be. An unsupported statement is not sufficient evidence—as many applicants have learned at the cost of disappointment. Many claim to have lost their certificates of honorable discharge from the service. Others, having them, have omitted bringing the certificates.

Persons having been members of other homes and desiring readmission to this, are often rejected because they have not complied with regulations, which require that six months must have elapsed from date of discharge before readmission to a home. One instance recalled is that of a poor old fellow who came from Idaho seeking admission, only to learn on presenting himself at headquarters that he could not be admitted, because the membership of the Home had reached the maximum number for which Congress had made appropriation, and the president of the board had just ordered "no further admissions at present." The old man had tion to the Home, and was destitute of means, difficulties which could have been avoided had he first written to the Home.

Referring to transportation, the lack of money for which often stands in the way of some needy veteran who wishes to enter the Home, it should be known that the government has thoughtfully provided for that emergency, and the veteran has only to make his condition in this particular known in his letter of application. Paragraph 89 provides that:

"Applicants, on original admission, who are unable to pay their transportation, may, when public funds for the purpose are available, be furnished, on the order of one of the managers, transportation from their place of residence to the branch of the home to which they are admitted."

The phrase "original admission" occurring in the foregoing quoted paragraph, is intended to make plain to those seeking readmission that they are not included in that provision for transportation. The government probably takes the ground that if a veteran can afford to take his discharge from the home, he should be equally able to provide for his return thereto, without draft from the limited transportation fund.

Curious Case of Longevity.

One of the most curious instances of longevity is found in Miss Louisa Courtenay's "Notes of an Octogenarian." A witness in a will case in which Bellenden-Ker, the great English conveyancer, was engaged, was asked if he had any brothers or sisters. He replied that he had had one brother who died 150 years ago. The court expressed incredulity and documentary evidence was produced in support of the statement. This showed that the witness's father, who married first at the age of 18, had a son who died in infancy. The father married again at the age of 75, and had a son who lived to appear in the witness box at the age of 96, and made the above startling statement.

ELABORATE FIREWORKS DISPLAY TO SWELL ELKS' FUND.

Cash Needed to Make Illuminations and Decorations During Convention Week Most Magnificent in City's History—More Than Seven Thousand Dollars to Be Expended.

Beginning tomorrow evening and continuing every night of the week, Los Angeles Lodge, No. 99, B.P.O.E., will present the New York production of Pain's "Carnival of Naples" and the "Eruption of Mount Vesuvius" at Fiesta Park.

To accommodate the crowds that are expected to attend, 5000 extra seats have been constructed and are already placed, and extra boxes for distinguished guests have been provided. Several rows of arc lights and hundreds of incandescents have been arranged throughout the grounds, as well as special decorations of flags, bunting and lanterns.

The object of the entertainment is to add $7500 to the fund for obtaining proper street illumination and building decorations during Elks' week in July. For that time, the Decorating Committee has planned the most elaborate illuminations and artistic decorations in the city's history. Upon the financial success of the pyrotechnic display the carrying out of the plan depends.

For the presentation of the fireworks carnival more than three carloads of scenery and apparatus are used. When set up, the scenery occupies nearly three acres of ground ous as in a circus. There are more than 300 people employed in the imposing pageants, the battle, races and many acrobatic and vaudeville acts.

The show will open with a concert by the Vesuvius Band. Then will follow a parade of all the participants in the spectacles, and the "Carnival of Naples," which will include a floral parade. The illumination of the miniature city takes place when the mountain begins to pour forth burning lava.

Earthquakes and the destruction of Naples by fire will close the spectacle.

The programme is to end with a special display of fireworks, which will be changed every day, and which will be arranged to please the various societies and organizations that will be represented.

How Gov. Haskell Fell.

"Gov. Haskell of our State was doing pretty well as a local politician, but he got over his head the minute he tried to be a national figure," said Capt. R. L. McDowell of Tulsa, Okla., at the Rennert, in Baltimore.

"The Governor's political career is about over. He tried to spread out too much, and failed. His fate was like that of a bully who tried to intimidate every man in a little saloon in a North Dakota town, one cold winter day, when the place was crowded with citizens trying to get out of the reach of the blizzard.

"The bully began by treating everybody, after which he swore he could lick any man in North Dakota. No one disputed the claim. Again he treated the mob, and following this, swore in yet louder tones that he could lick any man in North or South Dakota. After getting away with this, the braggart a third time set 'em up, and then announced he could clean up any son of a gun in either of the two Dakotas and Minnesota. At this a quiet-looking Norwegian jumped up and sailing into the bully came near beating him to death. There are always men who do well enough until they spread out too far."—[Baltimore American.

The Eye and Its Disease

Prof. Wilson's Treatise on Eye Diseases Should be read by every person with impaired eyesight. The book is free.

EYE GLASSES NOT NECESSARY

Every reader afflicted with any impairment of eyesight should not fail to send for this book. It contains 64 pages and cover and describes in language so plain and interesting the various forms of disease of the eye and sure and safe methods of treatment that a reader of ordinary intelligence may fully comprehend every word.

Eye Disease the author says: "Nine out of persons wearing glasses might better be without them. EYE GLASSES DO NOT CURE. The defects that make them necessary can be removed in most cases by proper treatment. There is also no need for cutting or drugging the Eye for most forms of disease, for the cause can be removed by a newer and more humane method."

The book also goes into full detail of the causes and effects of disease in general. It advocates a method of treatment of disease that is based upon a humane and common sense principle. It contains the recommendation of hundreds of intelligent persons in every walk of life who have been cured. A free trial of the "Actina" is offered in every case.

If the reader is interested, write for a copy of this Book. It is absolutely free, a postal will bring it. Address Actina Appliance Co., Dept. 89E, 811 Walnut St., Kansas City, Mo.

THE GREAT BLOT.

The great blot on the world is egoism. Just rub that out of man, and all will be well. There would be no real unhappiness in towns and cities, no inhumanity, no wars, no end-seat hogs, no big, burly brutes crowding weak little folk off the sidewalks.

Broadly defined, egoism means the selfish desire of each individual man to have the best of whatever is going. Turn wherever you will and you will see the egoism of man cropping out. Observe a crowd waiting for a street car on a corner. The moment the car stops there is a wild and brutal scramble for seats. Women, children, cripples and all weak persons are ruthlessly shoved aside in order that the strong may reach the car and secure seats. If you see a man who stands aside waiting until others are cared for before he even thinks of looking out for himself, you are looking on an ideal man who will be the prototype of the man of times to come, please God, when the world is a better world than it is today.

The curse of egoism is the thing that makes us boasters. It is what produces the man who thinks that whatever he has is something better than the thing that any other man has. "This is my horse," he will say; "it is the best horse in America." He will tell you that when he traveled he had the best berth in the coach and the best room in the hotel. He will take a peanut from his pocket and tell you that it is the most wonderful peanut ever grown.

Could we be less thrasonical we would be more kind. What does it matter that we have not the best of everything so long as we have our share, or at least enough? If we be true philosophers we need not be envious. A rich man builds a fine home and a wonderful garden, but he builds it no more for himself than for the wanderer who passes on the roadside. The wanderer may stop and admire the roses and the lawns and the flower-flamed hedges to his heart's content, as though they were his own. True, he cannot sleep under the splendor of the great roof that the rich man has reared, but he can find a better bed out under the wide sky with the stars for coverlet and the songs of birds to bid him good morning. In a world so big as this a house is a small thing, no matter how big it may be in the vast pride of its owner. Do not begrudge the man his house, but do not be foolish enough to envy him.

Crush your ego and you will be happy. There is a joy in giving way that you can never feel in selfish grasping. "You first, my dear Alphonse," is the idea. "Madam, will you not give me the pleasure of vacating my seat that you may occupy it in my stead"—that's the way. Train yourself to habits of that kind and you will be surprised to see how much delight you have been missing before you learned the joy of unselfishness.

GETTING THEIR EYES OPEN.

They tell a story about a citizen of somber complexion who took some kittens to a politician to sell and told him they were Democratic kittens. Learning he had made a mistake as to the political creed of his neighbor, he went back in a couple of weeks and offered the same pussies, alleging they were Republicans. Being taxed with his inconsistency, he replied: "But, massa, dey has deir eyes open now."

They are getting their eyes pretty wide open up in Oregon, in these days. It is not only in Portland where a revulsion against U'Renism is actively sweeping, but all over the State.

We propose to set forth the new views in the words of the editors who have recovered from the acute attack of U'Renism which was an epidemic in Oregon a few years ago.

The Oregonian of Portland, leader of the Web-foot press, in its leading editorial on Sunday, May 16, dealing with the approaching election, says:

"There are some thirty or forty initiative and referendum measures to be voted on at the coming municipal election. Many of them are intricate and complicate. They involve propositions and consequences that the general electorate cannot take time to understand. The object behind them is to set aside representative action and government, to assert that the whole body of the electorate is as well qualified and prepared to decide questions that arise in municipal government as the few can be who, in the respective lines of inquiry, of study, practice and action, have gone into the details of these matters, and have had opportunities, therefore, of gaining special knowledge. . . . Moreover, it [the initiative and referendum fad] completely sets aside the idea of representative government under which all modern and all democratic progress has been made. . . . To say this is not to dispute or to question the right of the people to self-government. . . . Here now is the opportunity, here is the need, of representative government as never before. . . . During the last four years in the municipal government of Portland charlatanry has had its reign as never before. . . . The shallow politician seeking his own interest and promotion and advantage will talk to them [the dear peepul] and urge them on in the name of liberty and the rule of the people [huh!] . . . Here is a ballot a yard long. It is impossible for the general voter to read the ballot through, to study each subject, to decide rationally what he ought to do. Much of the voting, probably a majority, will be done at random. . . . The vice of this system is that it invites all persons who have special interests to be served, all who are devoted to dreamy theories and especial fads or chimeras for the regeneration of society, to appeal to the initiative on the one hand for legislation denied by sober judgment of representatives of the people, and for referendum on the other to arrest measures the representatives of the people have approved. This system of government . . . is found to be on the whole at variance with the well-being and progress of the State. . . . It gives caprice, whim-wham, crochet, vagary, hysteria, self-seeking interest, theories of various kinds and half-baked notions first place for consideration, to the exclusion of judgment based on experience and knowledge."

In almost this exact phraseology as long as two years ago The Times warned the people of Oregon of what would overtake them through their adoption of U'Renism. Let us take an excursion from Portland, the metropolis of Oregon, out into the country. The McMinnville Reporter says:

"The Portland primary has come and gone and politics is considerably at sea. . . . Even among those registered as Republicans only about half voted, and of these considerably more than half voted for Joe Simon, the Assembly candidate. . . . Not all of those who voted that ticket are really Republicans. . . . Without doubt . . . statement No. 1 has weakened. . . . In fact, it became apparent immediately after the June election, and it was certain that statement No. 1, WITH ITS FALSE REGISTRATION, had not only defeated Fulton, but had elected Chamberlain to the United States Senate. Many declared that they were statement No. 1 men no longer. They came to feel that the principle had tricked them into choosing a man they did not want."

The Times expressed its unqualified condemnation of statement No. 1 before it was ever tried, and again after its effect was clearly shown in the recent election. The Lebanon Criterion joins the hue and cry of those who are hunting to its hole U'Renism in Oregon politics. Listen:

"Almost without an exception the Assembly-recommended candidates for city officers were nominated at the primary election in Portland last Saturday. The ticket for city offices will be headed by ex-Governor Joseph Simon. . . . We believe the people of Portland have acted wisely in nominating him for Mayor of that great city. This primary election is of much more than local concern. It has a State-wide importance in that it indorses the Assembly-recommended candidates for office and will discourage the self-constituted candidate with which this State has been cursed for the last few years. We are willing to advocate from now until the next State campaign an assembly of Republicans of the State for the purpose of adopting a platform and policy for the party and to recom-politics. We firmly believe that the county and the State will secure better men for all offices by such a plan and the State will receive a better service. . . . Every well-advised person knows that the primary law has sadly miscarried in its objects and purposes."

There you have it again. We tried to point out to the people of Oregon and later to those of our own State that there might be worse things in politics than the old party convention, lame and ineffective as these gatherings sometimes were. Now they have in the State of Oregon gone back to the old practice under a new name. It is not the "machine;" it is not the wicked politicians in Oregon, who are trying to defeat the will of the people and to rivet political shackles on the electorate anew. It is the people of Oregon who, finding U'Renism with all its cobweb theories, to have proven deceptive, to have misled them, to have worked for greater corruption in politics and less efficiently in official life, are now going back to the methods discarded two years ago.

The Spectator is a hebdomadal printed at Portland. This weekly says:

"The nomination of Joseph Simon was accomplished by the people. . . . An effort is being made by a crowd of dissatisfied would-be bosses whose candidates the people repudiated on Saturday to induce others of their creators to run as independents against Mr. Simon. These would-be bosses are assuring the people that the people do not want Mr. Simon for Mayor. . . . They are also informing us that the direct primary is not the proper way to nominate candidates [huh! for reformers;] the direct primary permits men of small caliber to offer themselves for the franchise of the people. The only proper way to nominate is to permit our would-be bosses to do it. [Really, that sounds like an echo from near home.] The argument would provoke laughter if it did not excite contempt. . . . The people nominated Mr. Simon because the people had had enough of the sky-rocket and kite-flying style of administration—enough of the crazy-quilt makers and cheap jokers who fiddled and faddled while Portland's interests were neglected. The people were tired of the men who spent so much time promising things that they had no time for performing anything—tired of the scandals in the police department, irregularities in the street department, incompetency in the water department and the widespread inefficiency that follows general civic administration."

This ends the first chapter in the revolt of the people against fad-obsessed theorists and their new-fangled devices in politics. There is more to come.

VICIOUS LEADERSHIP.

One of the worst counts to be made against labor unions in our own country, and in all other countries where these combinations become possessed of great power, has been the character of the men who become their leaders. The latest exhibition is only one in a long, long series covering nearly every nation where labor-unionism is prevalent. That is the case of Cornelius Shea, now of New York, formerly of Chicago, and still more remotely of Boston. The latest exploit of this thug is the awful assault committed upon his paramour, in their lodgings in New York City. With a jack-knife the coarse-grained brute stabbed the young woman over a score of times.

There would be nothing in this incident if it stood alone; but Shea has left a track behind him back to his youthful days in Boston reeking with blood at almost every step. He was the brutal leader of the brutal mob in the teamsters' strike at Chicago a few years ago, when awful crimes marked that outbreak. He went to Chicago from Boston with his hands reeking with crime.

Nor would Shea's career have any particular significance beyond his own individuality were he the only leader of these organizations of similar coarse-grained brutality, case-hardened against the most revolting crimes; but the point lies in the fact that while perhaps the most brutal of them all, Shea represents a type all too prevalent among the bosses of these organizations, such as the Tveitmoes, the McCarthys and the Caseys of San Francisco.

Go to London and you find men of the same sort as Shea, Casey and Tveitmoe at the head of these organizations and in the lead of every violent outbreak they create. Step over the channel to Paris, and, in fact, go into any modern city where these labor unions prevail and you will find the leaders of the same kidney as these so familiar to us near home.

Parks, another New York leader among these combinations, was sent to Sing Sing some years ago for not only stirring up strife in the business world which led to gross crimes, but for betraying his followers in the organization which placed him these leaders was shown to have entered into a conspiracy with the employers of labor to call off a strike among his followers for pay.

Deplorable results have been brought about by the failure of the rank and file of these labor trusts to recognize the very evident and simple fact that the leaders in every great movement, if any good is to come out of it and if great evil is not to come out of it, should be men both of probity and wisodm.

GREELEY STILL SPEAKS.

"Go West, young man, and grow up with the country," was the sage advice of far-seeing Horace Greeley to the young men of two generations ago. The advice fell upon willing ears, and during all the time that has elapsed the faces of thousands of Americans have been steadily set toward that great West which has been growing so fast and where so many people have been growing to astonishing greatness im wealth and honor year by year. Greeley had been in the West, near, middle and far. He had crossed the great fat plains, had climbed the heights of the Rocky Mountains, passed over the so-called deserts of the central basin, then surmounted the Sierras and finally rested by the Pacific Ocean. He saw and recognized to a large degree the greatness of the country and the possibilities the West afforded for the young man.

Still the movement goes on. When Greeley first looked upon Chicago it was a big raw town, not nearly so big as it was raw. West of the Mississippi he saw mostly an unsubdued wilderness, stubborn but promising. The mountain regions were the undisputed habitat of the wild beast and the wild Indian, and the Pacific Coast was a dubious land where civilization was on trial with an uncertain outcome for the country. The Argonauts who first reached California in search of gold, in a fleece or otherwise, for at least two decades looked upon the civilization of this State as tentative. It was simply a mining camp, or a multitude of mining camps, where people had come to dig the treasures from the mountains' ribs and then go back to their old homes in the East to spend the money they had dug from the mines.

There is no longer anything in the West between Chicago and San Francisco, from Puget Sound to Mexico, that is marked by any characteristic that would justify the term terra incognita. It is a thoroughly explored region. The mythical "Great American Desert" is marked off the map and in its place are written in names of great cities, of flourishing communities, of rich mines and of proved agricultural worth.

Did you read the figures given by the railroads showing the armies of people who have been coming west during this spring? Over 70,000 persons left their eastern homes in about sixty days to seek new homes, not in the near West nor the Middle West, but in the farthest West of all. During all these sixty days nearly 1200 persons a day crossed the divide to seek new homes in this farthest and greatest West.

The lines running out of Chicago account for almost 20,000 of these migrating home-seekers who turned their faces westward. There were 7500 of them, or an increase of more than 50 per cent. over the previous year; and notice that California got something over 7000, or over one-third of the total migrants moved out by the Chicago roads. The lines operating from points north of Chicago through the most northerly tier of States carried over 50,000 of these migrating home-seekers. The final destination of those moving over the Hill lines is not given in the report, but we may be sure that California will get its share (and that is the lion's share) of these as well as of the other migratory hordes.

Remember this is only the movement for about sixty days. We have here in the single city of Los Angeles during the current year of the school census an increase in population almost as large as the total figures given by the railroads running west from Chicago. According to the school census, comparing this year with a year ago, the population of the city of Los Angeles increased by more than 15,000 souls.

This western movement of population is particularly encouraging to us of the farthest West when we consider the dull conditions that have ruled in business for a year past. The movement of population is always slowest in bad times. When business is good it is easy to dispose of property at a fair price, but in dull times the very opposite is the case. Owners are slow to sacrifice. They set a full value upon their holdings and are loath to lower their pretensions. Money circulates slowly sary funds to purchase a business. As conditions generally improve we may look for a very considerable increase in the numbers of these migratory armies which are still following the advice of the great editor of the New York Tribune.

LET ATKINSON GO.

Thomas Atkinson, a man in Mississippi, more than twenty-five years ago was convicted of murder and sentenced to the penitentiary. He escaped and avoided the officers of the law who pursued him. Later he married and, succeeding in concealing his identity, he has lived an exemplary life for a quarter of a century, working into an independent position in the world and the respect of all his neighbors. The other day a detective employed on some other case ran across a clue, by accident, which revealed the identity of Thomas Atkinson. Steps were taken to arrest him and send him back to jail. He fled to the woods, armed, and defies the officers.

A truce would better be made with Thomas Atkinson by the authorities. Society is not vindictive nor are penal laws intended to be resentful. The main purpose of the laws is the protection of society, and the secondary intention is the reformation of the lawbreaker. In the case of this man, society seems to have nothing more to fear from him and he has worked out his own reformation. The ends of justice would be better subserved by offering him immunity for all past offenses and giving him an opportunity of still making good. It would have been better, if Atkinson's behavior has been as exemplary for twenty-five years as reported, to have covered up the whole affair and permitted the man to pursue his course in peace and quietness, enjoying the affection of his family and the respect of his neighbors.

RUNS INTO MONEY.

Only close observers are aware of the enormous figures appearing in the papers filed with the Clerk of Los Angeles county representing business transactions from day to day. On Monday of the current week there were three trust deeds filed, representing an aggregate of $10,150,000.

The Los Angeles and Redondo Railroad Company gave a trust deed to the Los Angeles Trust Company, trustees, conveying the property of the railroad for the sum of $5,000,000.

The Cudahy Packing Company filed on the same day a trust deed to the Illinois Trust and Savings Bank and William H. Henkle, as trustees, covering their plant down on the river bank and other property, for another $5,000,000.

The same day the Covina City Water Company filed a trust deed to the Los Angeles Trust Company covering certain property belonging to the water company, for $150,000.

Girl-Hunting.

The murder of a child who was waylaid in the lonely depths of Griffith Park has horrified this community. You hear angry talk about lynchings and so on—wild talk.

Many young girls in Los Angeles are worse than murdered right along and there is no talk of lynching.

On the contrary, the social wolves who pursue them are protected with a good deal of tenderness.

Their names are continually withheld from disgrace "because it would break up families."

The man who slaughtered this child in the park was some perverted, insane, dull-witted beast, hardly responsible.

These other men, who are sheltered, do their hunting on the main streets, and tell of their conquests in the clubs. I know, through the police, of several men in this city, who hunt young girls as sportsmen do rabbits. And they do not consider their coups worth talking about unless the victims are of good families—then the girls are considered "classy."

The "American Queen."

All this gush over "the American girl—our queen," in no slight degree contributes to the danger of girls—and makes girl hunting good.

She imagines herself an independent woman of the world and the men who "hunt" help her to think so. That's part of stalking her.

Everybody helps her to think so.

Harrison Fisher, the artist, recently got a little free advertising by declaring that the American girl of 18 is the most beautiful and fascinating being in the world.

Huh! at 18!

A woman really begins to have charm at about 35—when she has pigged to her full capacity, and has read all the love stories she intends to. The most fascinating woman I ever met was a whole lot nearer 80 than 18.

Having delivered this deft at our national charmer, I make the concrete and wholly practical observation that our high school is in the wrong place. When a new one is built, in the residence end of town, all the girls should be sent there.

Going down through the city after school and hanging around soda water stands doesn't do them any good.

Jack London.

What beautiful and uplifting ideas Jack London has!

His latest offering to literature is a story called "South of the Slot," of which the moral seems to be that it is more noble to live the life of a professional "slugger" for a labor union, beating up defenseless "scabs" and murdering policemen, than to be a respectable college professor.

Mr. London, like the illustrious crusader, Francis J. Heney, is a product of "south of Market street."

Wasted Tears.

My little friend, "Dago Willie," the newsboy, encountered a most embarrassing business crisis this week.

Willie's long suit is sobbing. About dark, he hunts his prey. You feel a little, fluttering touch on your sleeve and a little, broken voice sobs: "Missus, please, I ain't sold no papers tonight, and I'm afraid to go home."

Some of the men in a barber shop wanted to see him do it.

"Willie, cry for us," they said.

"I ain't goin' to cry fer nothin,'" said Willie, shrewdly.

They raised a 10-cent purse.

"Lemme hold the money in m' hand," said Willie.

They let Willie hold the dime, but they also held Willie for caution.

Willie did his best, but he couldn't "make a cry."

Mortified, and with a wrecked fame, Willie stood scratching his shins. Then the barber took the dime away from him and turned him out.

As he hit the sidewalk, grief and disappointment welled up in Dago Willie's heart, and he bellowed aloud. But he suddenly remembered the cash value of his woe, and burst back into the shop.

But they wouldn't give the dime. They wanted fictitious tears—the real thing didn't count.

Thus did Dago Willie learn how false a thing is art.

A Country Judge.

The "Californian" of Bakersfield naively says that what's needed in San Francisco are some country judges and points out how Judge Mahon of Yolo disposed of the Luther Brown case with celerity and dignity.

Says the Bakersfield paper:

"There was no foolishness, no wild clashes between attorneys, no threats of bloodshed, and no inviting rival attorneys to come outside and settle difficulties.

"In Judge Lawlor's court, the Calhoun case is still in progress and it has been on trial for some five months. Everything goes there. A witness may answer any old question from the date of the birth of his grandmother to the price of steel rails, and it is all admitted. The merits of the overhead and conduit systems, the strike of two years ago, anything and everything is admitted, and the case drags wearily along. The attorneys threaten each other and defy the court. The court says it will do things to the lawyers, but it never does. The question of whether Patrick Calhoun bribed Supervisor Nicholas appears to have been lost sight of, and Spreckels, Phelan and Wheeler have been placed on trial along with everybody on each side of the noted case.

"It is hardly necessary to say that the trial of Calhoun might have begun and ended in three weeks time and still have allowed the greatest latitude in selecting a jury and in the introduction of evidence. The fault rests somewhere, and to the layman it appears to be in the weakness of the court."

San Luis Obispo, the Town That Is Hatched in a Scrap With a Big Steamship Company.

SAN LUIS OBISPO, May 18.—In these days of fights and challenges, San Luis Obispo has acquired unique interest as the city that is matched to fight a steamship line.

She is trying to get up a sort of league or alliance among the small cities along the Coast to discipline the common "enemy" (why "enemy" I don't know,) the Pacific Coast Steamship Company, which is doing a great deal for the Coast.

For years San Luis has been scrapping with the steamship line.

When, in 1772, the mission padres planted an outpost of the church in this valley, they had, as usual, an eye to the picturesque; they also thought of the fine grazing lands and of the little river that trickled along at the front door of the church. But they didn't think about freight shipments.

Owing to their oversight, San Luis is nine miles from the coast. It's harbor, formerly called Port Harford, and now called Port San Luis, is connected with the town by a small railroad controlled by the Pacific Coast Steamship Company.

This railroad and the conduct of the company's wharf at the harbor have been an almost endless cause of friction.

Finally, San Luis decided to fight the company and defy the corporation by having a county wharf. Bonds to the sum of $40,000 were voted and a wharf was built.

A custodian was appointed to take care of it; and that is as far as the story has progressed. No boats stop at the public wharf and the Pacific Coast Company continues to do business at the old stand.

Several other publicly owned wharves stand along the coast, however. The San Luis Chamber of Commerce has appointed committees to confer with these other cities having wharves on their hands. They want to find some independent steamship line that will use the whole chain of wharves.

Whatever the reason is, I find that all the small coast cities are complaining over the steamship service. They declare that they want to ship freight by sea, but that the steamship companies cannot be persuaded to give adequate service.

Since the Pacific Coast Steamship Company has put on big steamers, the smaller towns say conditions are worse than before. The steamers do not stop at all the ports.

The dream of San Luisans is to have a road across the State into the country about Tulare and Bakersfield.

They dream of a day when the immense freight tonnage of mid-State products shall be shot across the short haul into San Luis and so by sea through Port San Luis.

Every San Luis man discusses this; but he always tells you it will be impossible for a long time because of Harriman. They are afraid of Harriman.

"If we could build a railroad back into the middle of this State it would make a big city of San Luis," said one of the business men with whom I talked. "But Harriman would take it away from us before we got the last rail down."

In their project of getting an independent steamship line to take freight at Port San Luis, they are evidently not afraid of Harriman. They evidently believe that Harriman's sea rates are not very good.

In connection with the development of this harbor, a famous old landmark is there is no more striking bit of natural scenery than old Morro Rock.

San Luis lies in a cup of the hill, and at the foot of a high, craggy peak that rises sheer and abruptly above the town like an obelisk.

Beyond it, toward the sea, stands another sharp, conical peak, and where the sea breaks on the coast, a third sharp, sugarloaf. They rise like the pyramids, and the sea has torn a passage between the last peak and the shore, so that it has the appearance of drifting off.

The last peak of the series of three is the famous Morro Rock. It is a barren, storm-lashed landmark.

When it was decided to make a breakwater around Port San Luis, the government contractors fell upon this headland, and are blasting all the rock for the breakwater out of it.

The San Luis people have little sentiment about it. They say there are 160 acres on the top of Morro Rock, and there will still be enough when the breakwater is finished.

The government work, idle all winter, is about to be resumed.

Other important public improvements are in progress at San Luis. The people have voted $60,000 bonds for sewer; $30,000 for water and $40,000 for bridges on the country roads.

So hearty was the support of these plans that the bonds carried by a majority of the proportion of thirteen to one.

The sewerage is consumed at a sewer farm in the modern way. The water plans are to develop the mountain headwaters of the San Luis Creek, a picturesque stream that runs through the very heart of the city.

Planked by graceful overhanging trees, it meanders a way between the two chief business streets of the city.

It makes San Luis the most picturesque town I have seen.

San Luis Obispo county has changed political complexion within the last week.

The only Democratic daily paper has suspended publication and the death of Frank Campbell Mitchell has shifted the majority from the Democrats to the Republicans on the Board of Supervisors.

The Democratic paper was the Breeze, which may be said to have blown. Its decease leaves an independent paper, the Telegram, and the Tribune, a straight Republican.

The filling of the vacancy on the Board of Supervisors must have caused the Governor some embarrassment. The political situation was both strenuous and twisted.

At the time of the last election there came a split in the Republican party.

It was said at the time that a Lincoln-Roosevelt party was formed; but the people of San Luis say this is not so. The party divided on different lines.

Heading one faction was Warren M. John, a newspaper man of San Luis, and leading the other was former State Senator Lynch. Both were candidates for State Senator.

The delegates to the Senatorial convention in San Luis Obispo county were elected by popular vote; here Johns won from Lynch.

In San Benito county they were elected by the county convention; in Monterey county they were appointed by the Central Committee. In both these counties Lynch beat Johns.

Such bitterness of feeling resulted that Campbell, a young Democratic lawyer, was elected.

As a further result of the family quarrel, a Democratic Assemblyman was elected in a Republican district.

When the Democratic Supervisor died, it was understood, of course, that Gov. Gillett would appoint a Republican, and a renewal of the factional fight was expected.

Finally, however, a peace pipe was smoked at which both factions seem to have agreed to the appointment of a Swiss merchant named Luchessa, who had taken no part in the previous ruction.

When the appointment was made the Governor ignored the peace conference and appointed a man named Vetterline, to whom he was politically indebted. Vetterline is a good man and well respected. He was formerly chairman of the San Luis Obispo County his appointment will soothe or irritate the former sore.

Dist.-Atty. Nelson of San Luis has just finished a gallant attempt on about the most disheartening lines in the world—trying to convict an election cheater.

It is a curious fact that the public does not consider ballot frauds as a very serious matter.

In this case, a Paso de Robles saloon keeper named Basal was mixed in a fight to make Paso de Robles a "dry" town. In his anxiety over the result, he is alleged to have induced two young men, whom he met at a ball game on election day, to cross the county line and falsely register.

The case has been tried twice; the second jury was discharged yesterday, unable to came to any verdict. The people of the town sympathized with the defendant.

The Los Angeles syndicate which held Pismo beach has sold out to Denver capitalists.

This is one of the most beautiful beaches along the Coast. As a matter of fact, the beaches from Ventura north to San Luis are finer than ours in Southern California.

The trouble is, they don't get the tourists. It is too far north from Los Angeles and too far south from San Francisco.

They formerly had a good tourist hotel, the Ramona, but it burned down three or four years ago. Foundations are now being laid for a new Ramona, but I was told that it will not be rebuilt on the former lines, but will be a small house.

The temperance question is just beginning to be agitated in San Luis. At the present time saloons are allowed to remain open on Sunday and there are plenty of them. The question of more severe restrictions is stirred up.

THE PUBLIC SERVICE.

SUMMARY OF THE DAY.

The Board of Public Works yesterday authorized the placing of ten more street sprinklers in service.

The street department discussed with the City Engineer the question of storm drains for the south part of the city.

Mrs. Lillian M. Reed brought action yesterday against Howard S. Reed, for divorce, alleging cruel treatment. Property valued at more than $200,000 was tied up by temporary injunction.

A second petition for letters of administration on the property of the late George C. Dotter was filed in the Probate Court, indicating a contest.

AT THE CITY HALL.

PUT ON MORE DUST LAYERS.

BOARD OF WORKS INVITED TO SPRINKLING TEST.

Contractor Declares It Impossible to Comply With Requirements of Street Department — Discussing Storm Drains for South Part of City—Seek Vasher's Scalp.

J. H. Melvill, who withdrew his bid after being awarded the street-sprinkling contract for the next four years, yesterday requested the Board of Public Works to witness tests which he declares will prove it impossible for any bidder to comply literally with the specifications outlined in the contract. Melvill admits neglecting to fully read the advertised specifications, but says he bid with the understanding that 40 per cent. of the wagons might carry horizontal tanks for heavy grade work, as provided in a clause shown him before the specifications were finally adopted.

His principal objections are the horizontal undercut wagon demanded, which Melvill asserts will involve him with the S.P.C.A. The poles of these wagons are said to vibrate to such an extent as to irritate the animals and sometimes fatally injure them, as in one instance, when a three-inch depression threw the pole over and broke a mule's leg. He says the failure of a brake to work on a down-grade would result fatally, while a wagon not undercut could be stopped by turning the wheel against the bed of the wagon.

Melville fears that if he uses two cams instead of the one provided on wagons in the heavy grade district, other contractors will enjoin the City Treasurer from paying him on failure to comply with the specifications. The objection against the horizontal tanks he says, is that the water masses near the driver when going down grade, and the lack of pressure will fail to send the stream over the twenty feet of ground as provided.

The Board of Public Works before adjournment ordered ten more sprinkling wagons put in service, making a total of 114. This action was taken in response to dust complaints from the residence districts.

Storm Water Question.

In consultation with City Engineer Hamlin, Street Superintendent Humphreys and the other members of the Board of Public Works yesterday spent considerable time in discussing the question of storm drains for the southern part of the city. The system carried to the river by way of Sixth street two years ago, has proven effective in clearing the section north of that thoroughfare from the winter floods, but residents of the southern section were loud in their complaints during the winter, and it is likely that some step will soon be taken to drain that portion of the city also.

Vasher's Scalp Demanded.

Uneasy rests the head of a dog catcher. Tom Vasher has been kept in place as a deputy poundmaster. Yesterday Mrs. L. E. Giese filed with the clerk of the Police Commission a petition calling for his dismissal. It is alleged among other things that Vacher holds his job illegally, and his removal is forthwith demanded.

Pressure for Licenses.

The increase in the license business has been so great at the office of the City Clerk that it has been found necessary to do something to remove the congestion about the door of the office. A large window has been cut through into the main lobby of the City Hall, and applicants for peddlers' licenses, dog licenses and licenses for all other minor purposes, apply directly to the window in the lobby.

HAYES BUYS GAS.

Goldfield Mining Man Is the Only Bidder for the People's Gas and Coke Company.

The litigation between the Hayes and the Lowe factions in the affairs of the People's Gas and Coke Company, ended yesterday, with the sale at the Broadway side of the Courthouse of the entire property to G. H. Hayes, the Goldfield mining man, for $10,000. He was the only bidder and he made but the one bid. The purchaser is one of the largest owners of the bonds of the corporation.

Lee C. Gates, head of the legal department of the Title Insurance and Trust Company, officiated as auctioneer. His company was the trustee named at the time the company issued $5,000,000 in bonds, in September, 1906. Of these bonds, issues amounting to $328,000 were sold and Hayes bought $319,000 worth of them. The company defaulted on the bonds and no interest has been paid to Hayes since March, 1908. He afterward applied for the sale of the entire holdings, including the company itself, which were the securities pledged with the trustees to insure the payment of the bonds.

It is said by those who are in a position to know that the company is now to be taken over by a group of investors who will amply finance it and make it an active force in the business of the city. However, W. N. Goodwin, attorney for the purchaser of the property, and one of the directors, only partially confirms that view of the case. He says the company will be reorganized on a business basis, and that at the proper time it will no doubt have ample financial backing.

PENNSYLVANIA SOCIAL.

The Pennsylvania Society will hold a box social and dance, Thursday evening at Fraternal Brotherhood Hall. Ladies will take lunch boxes and the men will buy them. The meeting is to be held to arouse enthusiasm for the Pennsylvania May Day picnic at Eastlake Park next Saturday.

THIRD ACTION BY MRS. REED.

SUES THRICE FOR DIVORCE IN FIVE MONTHS.

Makes Queer Accusations of Cruelty, With Stories of Hunting Trips and Hardships, as Forecast in "The Times" Yesterday—Asks Six Hundred Dollars a Month.

For the third time within a little more than five months, Mrs. Lillian M. Reed yesterday brought an action for divorce against Howard S. Reed, alleging cruel treatment. This was forecast in The Times yesterday.

The court records show that on December 16, last, Mrs. Reed brought a similar divorce action, and that F. A. Stephenson was the attorney of record in the case. Harry B. Alexander was appointed receiver of the husband's property, but on March 1 the suit was dismissed and the receiver discharged. On March 15 Mrs. Reed entered a second complaint, and this time George S. Hupp was retained as her attorney. Alexander was for a second time named as receiver. On April 7, Mrs. Shortridge Clara Foltz was associated with Hupp in the case, and the action was dismissed on that date. Alexander was again discharged as receiver. This time Mrs. Foltz is the attorney of record. Coincident with the filing of the action yesterday Judge Bordwell signed an order restraining Reed, Cynthia J. Reed, his mother, and the Los Angeles Trust Company from transferring, or in any manner disposing of any property, real or personal, belonging to the husband. The restraining order will be up for action in Judge James's court Friday, next, when, on an order to show cause, Reed will be asked to pay forthwith to his wife $500 a month for support and maintenance, pendente lite, her counsel fees therein, and $100 a month for costs and expenses.

The complaint against Reed is voluminous, covering fifteen typewritten pages, but the high spot is the cruel treatment charged against the husband, a number of specific acts being set out. The Reeds were married in Denver, Colo., March 2, 1907, and the allegations of bad treatment appear in the first paragraph. The plaintiff charges that ever since their marriage Reed has treated her in a cruel and inhuman manner, inflicting upon her grievous mental suffering and anguish; that by reason of his wrongful and cruel acts toward her she has been made quite ill.

She asserts that on March 3, the day following the marriage, while in a room in a hotel at Albuquerque, N. M., the defendant said to her: "I will not have you near me at night, and you must make the best of any arrangement that I shall make for your accommodation." She also says in her complaint that ever since their marriage the defendant has objected to the presence of the plaintiff in his apartment during the night time, and commanded her not to undress or dress herself in his presence. She had to dress and undress in the bathroom, hallways and closets, she alleges.

Another paragraph of the charge says that almost continuously between March 6, at Pasadena, and April 4, 1907, at Hollywood, Reed treated his wife as a stranger; left her alone a great portion of the time, and persistently ignored her; refused to dine with her, and otherwise humiliated her.

It is also alleged that in April, 1907, in Hollywood, Mrs. Reed became quite ill and was confined to her bed, and that while she was in a helpless condition Reed rushed into her room, and, in a loud and angry tone, commanded her to get up, pack her belongings and start immediately with him to Alaska on a train leaving Los Angeles the same day. He declared she was only feigning illness, and said: "Young lady, you have heard what I have said to you," according to the complaint.

The following day, it is alleged, at Oakland, she became ill again, but her husband compelled her to continue her journey. At Seattle she was also prostrated, but, in spite of her protests, she had to accompany him, she charges, and he told her: 'I will never again be a friend to you, nor will I ever have any further association with you."

When on the steamer, between April 21 and 28, 1907, en route from Seattle to Uyak, Alaska, he treated her badly, she asserts, and on April 30, when they had reached Kodiak Island, he demanded that she travel through the snow and ice to reach a camping place. At Sacramento he left her alone on the street, and refused to allow her to come to his room, says the complaint. September 13, 1907, he made her pack up at Hollywood and make a trip to Chicago; December 23, same year, while at the St. Francis Hotel, Denver, she asked him for $10 to do Christmas shopping, and he refused her the money; April 24, 1908, he packed her off from Hollywood on a trip to the interior of Mexico on a hunting trip, according to her allegations. Mrs. Reed says she is of a refined and sensitive nature, desires a quiet home, and has no desire to forever travel.

The following is the schedule of Reed's holdings, according to the complaint:

Lots in the Reed Addition, West Jefferson street, worth $50,000; 160 acres of land in the Imperial Valley, $20,000; stock in the United States Bank and Trust Company, Santa Fé, N. M., $45,000; promissory notes, $25,000; stock in the Vitology Medical Book Publishing Company, No. 315 Dearborn street, Chicago, $10,000; property in Denver, Colo., $7500; real estate in Tahuska, I. T., $5000; money on deposit, $5000; property in Honduras, Kansas City, Colorado Springs and State of Washington, $50,000.

DOTTER'S ESTATE.

LITIGATION IN SETTLING?

From indications there will be litigation connected with the closing up of the estate of the late George C. Dotter, who was killed in an automobile accident in this city the 16th inst.

A few days after the death of Dotter, Cornie Dotter Carlson, his sister, filed a petition for her appointment as administratrix of the estate, and set out the following schedule of property: Cash in the First National Bank, $1000; an auto, $300; stock in the Boise Gun Club, of uncertain value; a diamond ring, worth $250, and a horseshoe diamond pin, valued at $100. The heirs were given as the petitioner, and, in addition, Idelle Purser and Lottie Van Pelt, also sisters of the deceased.

Yesterday a second petition for the appointment of an administratrix was filed by Lottie Van Pelt, one of the heirs, asking that she be named by the court to settle the estate. In her averments as to the property she declares that there was a life insurance policy for $5000 among the holdings of the Pacific Mutual Life Insurance Company, of uncertain value. The total value of the estate is estimated at $7000.

It will be recalled that upon the death of the mother some years ago there was much litigation, and from appearances the differences in the family are likely to again blossom into court proceedings of some character.

SUES MOTHER.

DAUGHTER MAKES CHARGES.

Mary Louise Carle of Prescott, Ariz., brought an action yesterday in the Superior Court against her mother, Mrs. Louise Heller, seeking to remove her as administratrix of the estate of her father, Charles Heller, who died in Los Angeles, October 1, 1906. She asks that Clinton D. Hoover of Prescott be appointed in her stead.

When Charles Heller died, it is alleged, he left $12,000 in cash and property at Nos. 957-963 West Sixth street, valued at $25,000. The heirs are the widow, Mrs. Louise Heller, two sons, Charles Clinton Heller and Louis Charles Heller, and the daughter, Mary Louise Carle, who is the petitioner in the case.

It is alleged that when Mrs. Heller was named as administratrix she promised to justly inventory the property, but that this has not been done. The mother is charged with listing one-half of the Sixth-street realty as community property, and the same with the $12,000 cash, leaving only half of the holdings to be divided among the heirs.

It is alleged the cash is now on deposit in Los Angeles banks, and an order is sought restraining the mother from disposing of it or the real estate until the petition can be heard. The daughter says she relied on her mother doing the right thing, and for this reason did not bring the action sooner.

COURTHOUSE NOTES.

BREVITIES MISCELLANEOUS.

INCORPORATIONS. Papers for the following incorporations were filed in the office of the County Clerk yesterday: Wholesalers' Investment Company, capital stock $100,000, by Karl Steinlein, H. Flotau, A. B. Barrett, J. B. Newton and E. Burr; Monogram Health Bread Company, capital stock $20,000.

NOT TO BE REOPENED. Judge James yesterday denied the application of Estella Rowan to reopen the proceedings by which her marriage to Joseph A. S. Heim of Kansas City was annulled in that court some time ago. The marriage was set aside on the ground that Heim was not 18 years of age when the ceremony took place, but the wife declared they lived together as husband and wife after he reached that age.

WANTS DAMAGES. H. B. Barrington brought an action against the Pacific Electric Company yesterday asking for $31,224.90 damages, on account of an accident at Broadway and Bellevue Drive, Pasadena, December 19, last. He alleges that he was thrown off the platform of a car and seriously injured. Of the total damages, $30,000 is asked for injuries, $520 for physicians' bills, $160 for hospital expenses, $44 for the services of a masseur, and $100 a month since the accident by reason of the plaintiff not being able to pursue his usual avocation.

CHARGES FRAUD. F. A. Bissell is plaintiff in an action brought in the Superior Court yesterday against L. E. Williams, David C. Adams and M. A. Williams. The plaintiff was the owner of 36,000 shares of the capital stock of the Pacific Salt and Soda Company, with a market value of $5000. He alleges that as the result of a trade in Glendale realty he was defrauded out of his property. He asks for the rescission of the contract and asks the restoration of his stock, with a judgment against the defendants for $2000.

A WAY OUT. Tony Palise, 19 years old, charged with the statutory crime against Veta Governale, settled the matter so far as the law is concerned yesterday by marrying the girl in Justice Summerfield's court. When the justice had pronounced them husband and wife, the bride, with her entourage, went in one direction, and Tony and his outriders, took the other direction. Palise had been released on bond, and after the ceremony the case against him was dismissed.

MORE COMPLAINTS. Judge Davis sat in Department 11 yesterday. The following informations were filed, and the accused will be arraigned Tuesday: Walter A. Wood, attempt to rob; Tour Yorba, rape; Cirelo Martinez, assault with a deadly weapon; H. G. Brooks, burglary.

BUSHNELL TRIAL. The trial of J. H. Bushnell, charged with embezzlement from the lumber firm of E. K. Wood & Co., will be called in Judge Willis's court, Monday. There are six complaints against the accused and the amount involved is more than $20,000. Bushnell has retained attorneys and it is understood will put up a strong fight against conviction.

SCHOOL FUNDS APPORTIONED.

Large Sum Ladled Out for the Educational Work of the County by Superintendent Keppel.

County Superintendent Keppel yesterday apportioned to the several school districts, money from the State and county funds, amounting to $263,005.92 from the State fund, and $292,784.64 from the county fund. The basis of division is $5.52 per unit of average daily attendance, for the State fund, and $3687 for the county salary, and $2458 for the contingent fund. The total average daily attendance units for the county, are 47,646. The county high schools receive in addition, the following amounts: Alhambra city, $6232.74; Burbank union, $1298.45; Citrus union, $3573.29; Compton union, $2198.93; Covina city, $3807.05; El Monte union, $2250.73; Excelsior union, $469.85; Glendale union, $5112.87; Hollywood union, $9275.56; Long Beach city, $14,150.24; Los Nietos Valley union, $1136.73; Monrovia city, $4647.27; Redondo union, $2350.07; San Fernando union, $5462.65; South Pasadena city, $4313.21; Whittier union, $3512.11; Wilmington union, $2282.65; Inglewood union, $3111.78.

Way to Make Money.

Mr. Dingley was riding up one day in the trolley car from the Capitol with Mark Hanna. He said: "Mark, you are many years younger than I am and you have made millions. I never have been able to get ahead of the game in life, and yet my legislation has made rich men richer and poor men rich. Now, how do they do it?" Hanna said: "Dingley, I can tell you right off how to make 25 per cent. on your investment." Dingley turned eagerly to his supposed benefactor and said: "For heaven's sake, Mark, how?" "Why," said Hanna, "these 5-cent tickets upon which we ride are sold by the railroad company in a bunch at 25 per cent. discount. There is your for-

INDUSTRIAL PROGRESS.

The Acme Portland Cement Company will begin the erection at Spokane of a plant that will ultimately have a capacity of 5000 barrels of cement per day. The plant will be built in units, the first unit to have a capacity of 1500 barrels a day and will give employment to about 150 men. Within two or three years it is expected the plant will be employing 450 to 500 men and manufacturing 3000 to 5000 barrels of cement a day.

The Pullman Company has begun a $3,000,000 improvement of its car shops at Pullman which will make them the largest car construction plant in one unit in the world. The additions are expected to be completed by September when the company will have capacity for an output of 40,000 to 50,000 freight and passenger cars a year. The increased capacity will be entirely in the line of steel car construction. One of the first orders which will be turned out by the new shops will be that of the Pennsylvania Railroad for 300 all-steel passenger cars to be used by that company as soon as the tunnels into New York City are completed.

One of the latest reports regarding the United States Steel Corporation is that in the immediate future it will establish several plants for the production of steam boilers. The boiler makers of the country have been giving the bulk of their orders for plates to the independent steel companies, and if the trust should go into the business a complete readjustment of the business of boiler making will have to be made. Large quantities of plates go into boilers, the industry ranking third as a consumer.

The Belgian steel works of the Cockerill Co. at Liege, has started an electric furnace which Consul H. A. Johnson says is built on the Girod system, with one electrode, and has a charging capacity of from two to three tons of steel. The dynamos furnishing the necessary electric current—an alternating current of fifty volts—are operated by gas motors, utilising the gas from the blast furnaces. The electric furnace is placed in a specially constructed building in close proximity to the steel converters, with which it is connected by a traveling crane, with a truck arrangement for transporting the ladles to the converters, which, when filled with molten metal, place it directly in electric furnace.

All There Was Left.

A Boston lawyer named Ames was retained as counsel for a man who stepped in a hole in the street and broke his leg. Suit was brought against the city in the sum of $1000, and Ames won the case. The city appealed to the Supreme Court, but here, also, the verdict was in favor of Ames's client. After settling up the claim, Ames handed his client a silver dollar. "What is this for?" asked the man. "That is what is left after taking out my fee, the cost of appeal and other expenses." The man regarded the dollar a moment, then looked at Ames. "What is the matter with this?" he asked. "Is it bad?"—The Argonaut.

Willow Furniture

Solves the Problem of Summer Comfort

Willow furniture is most ideally suited for summer use—indoors and out. It is strong, comfortable, and attractive. In the summer furnishing of the living room, it lends an air of coolness and comfort to the entire environment—while for the bedroom, it is always appropriate and restful.

The willow from which it is made is imported from France—and is unlike our American willow, being more uniform, pliable and very tough. Its flexibility makes it conform to every inclination of the body—while its toughness makes it very desirable for out of door use.

We show this willow furniture in a great variety of pieces in unusual designs, created to give the greatest possible degree of real comfort. It may be had in its natural light finish, or may be stained or enameled in any shade to harmonize with other furnishings.

The prices range from $7.50 to $22.50—and the values in every instance are typical of the "California"—based on the closest possible margin of profit.

The cushions for the seats and backs of the chairs may be had in plain denims, or imported and domestic cretonnes, chintzes, taffetas, and shadow prints in floral patterns, and dainty summer colorings. To go with this furniture, we show all the new and appropriate ideas in summer rugs and draperies. If you are a devotee of home comfort, we believe you will be interested in the timely suggestions for summer furnishings the "California" affords.

One of our windows this week will offer helpful hints for the summer furnishing of the home.

DENVER VISITOR MARVELS AT LACK OF ENTERPRISE.

Father of Extensive Colorado Irrigation Systems Wonders Why Southern California's Higher Mountain Valleys Aren't Made to Bear Apples.

Theodore C. Henry of Denver, temporarily staying at Hotel Hayward, is the father of the remarkable irrigation systems of Colorado. He has built an aggregate of 10,000 miles of canals, in lengths of from fifteen to 100 miles each, for irrigating districts with areas ranging from 10,000 to 150,000 acres. Many of these districts are adapted to raising the highest grades of apples and other deciduous fruits that are marketed in the Eastern States, and also a great variety of other agricultural products.

Before engaging in these Colorado enterprises Mr. Henry had been "doing things" in Kansas. He was the first Mayor of Abilene, and went from there to the State Senate in 1888-89. When he first settled in that section the people had the idea that winter wheat could not be raised in that State, but in 1874 he successfully experimented with 500 acres, and in four years had increased his holdings to 10,000 acres, all in winter wheat.

It was in 1883 that he investigated the agricultural possibilities of the rich river bottoms of Colorado. He perceived that a comprehensive system of irrigation was necessary to the transformation of waste and arid land into productive farms and orchards. His first step was to frame an irrigation district law, providing for the issuance of bonds under rigid regulations. This was duly enacted and under its wise provisions bonds to the extent of $20,000,000 were issued and marketed at from 90 to 95 per cent. of par.

It is remarkable that while these bonds have been issued by scores of irrigating districts, and have been handled by average men from many walks of life, there has never been an instance of default in the payment of interest, gross mismanagement or litigation of any kind between district and beneficiary.

The Redlands district in the Grand Valley is an example of what is being done along several of the numerous streams in Colorado. There has been installed a pumping plant, a few miles from Grand Junction, under the control of Michigan capital—Platt brothers of Lansing. An intake brings the water to a point where a fall of thirty feet serves to operate a turbine, which lifts the water of the Gunnison River 120 feet, to be utilized on one of the large tracts. At a distance five miles farther a hydro-electric plant again lifts the water, to a height of 200 feet, where a mesa of thousands of acres is watered.

Before these improvements were inaugurated the land was valueless for agricultural purposes, but even the unimproved land is now worth from $15 to $50 a nacre for common agricultural products, and from $40 to $100 for orchard farms. When apple and peach trees are in full bearing, the land will bring from $1000 to $3000 an acre.

The districts are generally divided into small holdings, ranging from five to twenty or thirty acres. The irrigated tracts are occupied principally by a hardy class of people from the Northern States. A family of five can make a good living by properly cultivating a ten-acre orchard. The people have comfortable homes, telephones, free postal delivery, good educational facilities, a pleasant neighborhood life, and raise stalwart sons and daughters.

The Colorado irrigation law was modeled on the Wright law of California, with some judicious modifications. Mr. Henry has secured the enactment of a similar law in the Territory of New Mexico, and succeeded in getting one passed by both branches of the Arizona Legislature, but for some unexplained reason the Governor failed to sign it and it became a dead letter. Mr. Henry marvels that an irrigation scheme has not been devised for the development of the vast stretches of fertile land in Mojave Valley, especially along the borders of that stream above and below the Sink.

In Southern and Central California the lower altitudes are already fairly well utilized, but there are splendid unimproved opportunities for apple orchards and other hardy fruits in the higher valleys of the Sierra Madre, San Bernardino, San Jacinto and Cuyamaca ranges, and an ample home market for the products. Both Oregon and Colorado are shipping winter apples to Southern California, when the latter State has available soil and climate for their production in its own extensive mountain valleys.

RUIN.

RACKET 'ROUND BURIAL PLACE.

NEGLECTED TOMBS YAWN IN OLD CATHOLIC CEMETERY.

Many Names Associated With the Early Days of the Pueblo Appear Graven on the Stones Marking Sepulture—Pitiful Condition of the Once Elegant Briswaiter Chapel.

BY ROSE L. ELLERBE.

We talk much about preserving our landmarks in this day, yet the most historic spot within the city of Los Angeles, after the Church of our Lady of the Angels—the old Roman Catholic burying ground on Buena Vista street—is now in a state of neglect and desolation that is a shame and a disgrace to the city.

The ground for this "campo santo" was set aside by El Pueblo de Los Angeles in 1839 and was accepted and consecrated by the church in 1844. The first burials were made as early as 1834. The men and women who made the early history of this city and of Southern California were laid to rest there. The place is full of historical names, having been used by the Catholic church as a cemetery for more than half a century.

The Spanish settlers and native Californians were buried there, many of them in quaint brick or stone tombs. Such names as Pico, Yorba, Bandini, Sepulveda, Dominguez and many others familiar in our records are found there. Joseph Chapman, Abel Stearns, Isaac Williams, B. D. Wilson and many other of the earliest American pioneers were put away in this spot. There are such names as Vignolo, Lanfranco, Apiabasas, Bernard and Temple.

Now the city has surrounded the old graveyard and its silence echoes to the restless chugging of oil-well pumps, the strident pounding of iron works, the constant rumble of railroad trains, and the clangor of trolley cars. Further burials were forbidden years ago and been abandoned. For long practically no effort has been made to care for this once beautiful spot, though the brush was cleared away a year and a half ago. Costly monuments are broken and discolored; the old tombs have been preyed upon by vandals; the stately pepper and evergreen trees grow riotously, untrimmed; luxuriant shrubbery and fragrant flowers are long since dead. Many bodies have been removed and on every hand are broken and yawning tombs and vaults; many of them entirely unprotected. Certainly it is only a merciful providence that has thus far prevented fatal accidents, or foul murders, in this neglected graveyard.

Many of the historical names are now gone, the bodies having been removed by friends. But many are still left. Here is the tomb of Don Bernardo Yorva (Yorba,) born in 1801, died in 1855—a true and noble son of California, descended from Spain's best blood. Here is the grave of Don Antonio Coronel, which should be a sacred trust to the city of Los Angeles, because of the Coronel collection, if for no other reason. Here still repose such pioneers as Alexander Bell and Richard Den.

A striking commentary upon the transitoriness of human memories is the Briswaiter memorial chapel, at the entrance to these grounds. Anatole Briswaiter directed in his will that $22,000 be expended upon such a structure to commemorate his name. The building was erected in 1890. Now it is a windowless, floorless ruin, with reproach. In strong contrast, only a few yards distant, was a little mound, with a wooden headboard, bearing date of 1836 and the words "Four years of age." This little grave was yesterday covered with fresh roses—the only bit of color in all that wilderness of weeds and destruction.

Although much of interest is now lost beyond recovery, prompt action might still save enough to make this a beautiful and sacred memorial to the past—a place which should mean to Los Angeles what the King's chapel and Tremont burying grounds mean to Boston.

And where is a peaceful, restful God's acre more needed than just here, amid the strife and din of commercialism? With all of its sordid surroundings and the ugly disorder and desecration of the place, the fine old trees still shelter and screen the graves, and a sense of peace still rests upon the beautiful, uprising stretch of ground which culminates in a hill, bearing many unmarked graves of priests and nuns and a tall wooden cross. Certainly it would seem that steps should be taken immediately by some organization, or by the city, before this historical graveyard is past all hope of preservation, to save one of the most interesting and valuable landmarks which Southern California possesses.

Another landmark well worth saving to the city is the old adobe house on the corner of Olvera and Marchessault streets, north of the Plaza. This is the last of the once famous adobe dwellings that surrounded the Plaza. It is a hay market, a blacksmith shop and a Mexican restaurant. It has been known for years as the Olvera house; but is said to have been built by Don Tiburcio Tapia, the first native merchant of the city, prior to his death in 1845, making it one of the oldest structures now standing in the city. It might easily be made an object lesson of the true adobe house of the pueblo days and a most interesting and attractive addition to our historical relics—for our own people and for our visitors.

Three Stages of Life.

I feel very clearly the beginning of a loss of interest not only in my own personality, my joys, and sorrows—all that happily lies far behind me and is long ago buried—but in the welfare of humanity and the happiness of the world.

No longer with my former keenness can I stand forward to defend such things as self-education, temperance, and thrift. I find that I have even became indifferent to human welfare, to the great question, will the kingdom of heaven come or not?

Having experienced this change and reflected the cause, I have come to the following conclusion: Every man lives through three stages of development, and at present I am in the last of these stages.

In the first stage a man lives only for himself, for his passions and impulses; for eating and drinking; for passing the time merrily; for hunting and for vanity. His life is rich and full. So it was with me up to my thirtieth year, until my first gray hair. Other men part with this period of their lives much more rapidly.

When I had traversed this stage, I began to think of the welfare of others, of all men, of all humanity. This stage was marked by energetic work in founding elementary schools, although I should say that the wish to do that showed itself in me earlier. These interests vanished with the first years of my married life, and were reborn with terrible force when I first began to realize the vanity and emptiness of our earthly life. All my religious sentiments became concentrated on the happiness of others and on the accomplishment of the kingdom of heaven on earth. This aspiration was as strong as, and filled my life as completely as my first aspiration to personal happiness.

But now I feel that this last aspiration is, in turn, dead. It has ceased to fill my life, it no longer carries me away; and I have been obliged to pose to myself the question: Was there really anything good in work directed toward helping men in their struggle against drunkenness and against superstition?

I felt that within me was being born yet a new phase of life, a new foundation of life, which must replace all the others, because it contains an aspiration to the happiness of humanity, which, in turn contains an aspiration to personal happiness. This new foundation is work in the service of mandments and His will. This is not the perfecting of one's self. No, it is something else. It is an aspiration to divine purity.

This new foundation of life consists in keeping clean the good intrusted to us by God, in the beginning of a new life, in the aspiration to a better, higher life, and in being ready always for this better life. This aspiration begins to seize me more and more strongly. I feel that it fills me entirely, supplants all other desires, and makes life as rich as it was in the former periods.—[Count Leo Tolstoi, in Collier's Weekly.

Chinese Opium Reform.

Says the North China Daily News: "It seems as if the suppression of poppy cultivation is to be strictly enforced in Kiangsu. Several persons who have traveled in the country report that none at all is being sown this year. Across the border in Shantung they are still planting it, though in reduced quantities. It may be that the high price of grain is the actual cause, for the farmers say that they can make almost as much on wheat as they can with the poppy, and the income being the same, they would prefer to raise wheat. But the officials are in earnest in their efforts to suppress poppy culture, while they are as lax as ever in regard to the use of opium, the dens still being wide open. Anti-opium pills—a very euphonious name for morphia—are being used more and more. [illegible] many Chinese are actually [illegible] thereby. They consider it a very [illegible] way to break the habit of smoking [illegible] do not reflect that the pill [illegible] mains."

DESERT DRAMA.

INTERVENERS MAKE SIZZLING CHARGES.

Break Into Southern Pacific Foreclosure Suit Against the California Development Company Pending in Superior Court.

ALTHOUGH practically all the Imperial Valley ranchmen anticipate the making of many improvements in the present irrigation system if the Southern Pacific company assumes formal control of the California Development Company's plant, a number of stockholders of the development company are attempting to obstruct the foreclosure suit now pending in the Superior Court.

After many preliminary skirmishes the case has been set for trial about the middle of June, when it is hoped that judgment will be rendered and the whole matter finally settled. The railroad company brought suit to foreclose on the property of the development company, in order to reimburse itself for near $1,500,000 expended for the direct benefit of the company and the valley settlers.

It is admitted that the Southern Pacific holds notes for the amount sued for, but the interveners claim that the loans were made in an irregular manner and for the purpose of defrauding the bona fide stockholders.

ADMIT NECESSITY.

Most of the stockholders admit the necessity of having the property pass into stronger hands, in order that the irrigating canals may be extended and the settlers be given all the water needed for the development of the rich valley.

Altogether the Southern Pacific has expended near $5,000,000 in the Imperial Valley. It is expected that the present Congress will reimburse the railroad company for its expenditure of $1,800,000, which sum was used in preventing the Colorado River from inundating practically the whole valley. The railroad has also expended large sums in changing its tracks, which were threatened by the rising Salton Sea, and in other improvements.

The California Development Company is apparently unable to meet its obligations, and it admits its just debt to the Southern Pacific.

In opposition to the $1,400,000 foreclosure suit against the California Development Company, the so-called liberer interests have filed a sensational intervention in the Superior Court in this county. From a matter-of-fact action to recover on a series of overdue promissory notes, the litigation has developed into a drama of the desert. The Blaisdells, Hebers and other stockholders of the development company, who have opposed its recent policy, have allowed their apparent animus against the railroad company to find expression in paragrapha which fairly sizzle.

The intervenors allege that the Southern Pacific retarded the enterprise of the California Development Company by charging extortionate freight rates. Instead of admitting that the defendant ought to pay its bills, they insist that the railroad officials conceived the purpose of gaining control of the development company, when it was in financial straits and its credit was impaired." After admitting that the development company "accepted" a loan of $200,000, it is alleged "that the agreement (to protect the loan) was so worded and drawn that it became impossible for the California Development Company to ever extricate itself."

It is further alleged that immediately after the execution of the contract that the Southern Pacific assumed full control of the development company, and that the defendant has not paid the $200,000 loan by reason of such control.

"SADDLING OF DEBTS."

Another sensational allegation of the intervenors is that the object of the Southern Pacific company in entering into the agreement was "the saddling of debts for the maintenance of its right of way upon the California Development Company, and that the railroad is indifferent to the interests of the stockholders of said company, having other and conflicting interests of its own to conserve."

It is represented that the Southern Pacific company made large advances to the development company for the railroad corporation's own benefit, and caused the notes sued on to be executed by Epes Randolph and W. J. Doran, "as alleged and pretended officers of said defendant."

The intervenors continue: "It was the purpose of the plaintiff in entering into the contract to manipulate the assets of the California Development Company in such a manner that the interests of the stockholders would be rendered wholly valueless.

"The plaintiff further proposes to sell the valuable water rights of said defendant to the Reclamation Service and to reap all the profit to the injury of the intervenors by means of divers and fraudulent devices carried out through R. H. Ingran, Epes Randolph and other directors elected by it for said defendant.

That the said Randolph and others have discharged the regular attorney, who would, as far as possible, have protected the rights of the defendant and its stockholders, and employed another attorney residing in Arizona, who is connected in business with said Epes Randolph and who, in fact, is the attorney for the Southern Pacific company in Arizona."

CONNIVANCE ALLEGED.

It is alleged that the board of directors of the development company is conniving with the plaintiff in order to aid the plaintiff in securing judgment. The intervenors, therefore, ask the court to declare the contract between plaintiff and defendant void and against public policy. Attorneys John D. Works and Lewis R. Works represent the intervenors in their remarkable series of charges against the plaintiff and defendant.

The defendant, for whose ostensible benefit the dissatisfied stockholders have taken up the legal cudgels, indulges in no pyrotechnics, but admits that within the past four years, the plaintiff has advanced various sums of money for the benefit of the defendant. There is no denial of the validity of the notes, but the defendant questions the sum due the plaintiff.

The answer sets forth the original condition of the Imperial Valley, and gives a brief history of the remarkable transformation of the desert into thousands of acres of fertile soil.

The defendant states that prior to the execution of the contract in dispute, that A. H. Heber and interveners, as well as the defendant, appreciated that the closing of the intake through which the Colorado River was passing into the Salton Sink was essential to the welfare of the organization.

After telling of the splendid engineering skill displayed by Col. Randolph, the defendant shows how the $200,000 loan was soon expended in attempting to stem the flood, making other loans necessary.

FOR REORGANIZATION.

At a stockholders' meeting, the following resolution was adopted: "That in view of the large floating indebtedness of the company the board of directors is urged to arrange, if possible, at an early date, some suitable reorganization of the company's finances, satisfactory to the creditors of the company and just to the company, with a view of permanently providing for present debts and future requirements."

Prior to the annual stockholders' meeting of June 5, 1907, in addition to the $200,000 loaned in pursuance of the terms of the original contract, the plaintiff had advanced various sums aggregating $1,501,500.65, and the defendant had executed twelve promissory notes for this amount. At the stockholders' meeting the financial report showing the advancement of this large sum by the plaintiff was approved. The intervenors, who are now making complaint about the payment of the development company's debt, were either present in person or by proxy at this meeting, and fully approved the proceedings. None of the stock held by the plaintiff as collateral security for the oroginal indebtedness was voted.

The answer goes on to state that on December 21, 1907, the defendant had become indebted to the plaintiff in a sum approximating $2,000,000. The bulk of this money was expended in conserving the property and assets of the defendant. With a view of protecting the plaintiff against unnecessary loss, the defendant transferred to the plaintiff various assets, which it was within the power and right of the defendant to transfer and sell. Between December, 1907, and the date of this action, there have been assignments of assets valued at $812,285.10.

It is stated that the money advanced to the development company, saved the Imperial Valley from utter ruin and enabled the company to carry out its contracts. The court is asked to investigate the various transfers of assets from defendant to plaintiff, and examine the books and papers relating to the transactions in controversy. The defendant expresses its willingness that after the proper balance due is ascertained judgment be rendered accordingly.

Eugene S. Ives, one of the best-known corporation lawyers in the West, is counsel for the defendant.

SETS FORTH NOTES.

The complaint filed some time ago by the Southern Pacific company sets forth various promissory notes made by the defendant to the plaintiff. One note for $100,000 was executed, October 19, 1906; another for the same amount was given in November of the same year. A third note for a like amount was given in December of the same year.

All the notes are set forth in the complaint, and in each count it is alleged that demand has been made for the payment of the said notes, but that the defendant has refused to pay the same.

The document closes with this allegation: "That on November 30, 1908, the defendant was indebted to the plaintiff for a balance due upon an open book account for moneys advanced and paid by the plaintiff in the sum of $1,405,927.43. Judgment is prayed for with costs of suit."

Attorneys Denis and Loewenthal appear as counsel for the plaintiff.

A RICH PRINCE AT HARVARD.

Student With Income of $12,000,000 a Year Is Preparing to Rule.

[Boston Globe:] The future ruler of 2,000,000 subjects and the heir of riches that make the famed wealth of Midas pale into insignificance, Prince Jaisingrao Gaikwar, the son of an Indian Rajah, is now preparing himself at Harvard for his future position.

When the Gaikwar of Baroda, second in importance among the Rajahs, visited America two years ago he was so pleased with the methods of teaching at Harvard that his last word to President Eliot was that his sons would be sent to finish their education at Cambridge.

Accordingly Jaisingrao Gaikwar, 19 years old, elder son of the Rajah, is now installed in a sumptuous suite of rooms in upper Westmorely Court, one of the most exclusive "outside" dormitories.

The heir to an annual income of $12,000,000, Prince Gaikwar, as he is known, asserts his democracy by a comparatively modest college existence and an attitude of good fellowship which has already made him popular among Harvard men.

Among the many heirs to vast fortunes who have attended Harvard the future Rajah of Gaikwar can probably boast of the most fabulously wealthy father.

Today the Maharajah's public revenues reach a total of $6,800,000 a year, while his private resources are said to bring him as much more.

The education of the young ruler to American ways is but a step in the revolution of the Baroda state.

Born of a race which once delighted in most inhuman cruelty, the Gaikwar of Baroda now seeks to give his people the best that modern civilization of the West has to offer. He comes from fighting ancestry, being a descendant of that great Mahratta soldier, Damaji Gaikwar. His title, Shamsher Bahadur, was won by that warrior at the battle of Bellapore, at the end of the seventeenth century, when the imperial army of Delhi was defeated. The title was conferred by the Shahu Raja of Satara in admiration of his bravery.

While Prince Jaisingrao has a number of valuable diamond pins and some of the royal jewelry with him at Harvard, he dresses modestly, seldom appearing with more than a single jeweled scarf pin or a diamond ring, and his clothes do not appear to be more extravagant than those of many students of modern means.

He is fond of the theater and of the usual freshman amusements, but never allows pleasure to interfere with his college studies.

He declares that American prosperity is the result of one of the most equitable forms of government in the world, and he hints that the future progress of Baroda will owe much to the example which is held up by this country.

While the Prince could have half a dozen automobiles at his command and enjoy the most sumptuous luxuries ever conceived by a college student, he is entirely averse to things of that sort.

Every morning at 8 o'clock he rolls out of bed in a very plebeian manner and ducks into his bath in a scramble to reach the lecture room before roll call.

College he likes. He says that he enjoys it as much as any one else, and from the large number of friends that he has already acquired it is safe to say that the Prince is liked by the college.

In personal appearance Prince Gaikwar is olive complexioned, with oval face, plump cheeks, lips a little thicker than those of the average American, and with luminous dark eyes. He is slightly undersized in height, but usually carries himself erect and square shouldered.

His preparatory studies in America at the Horace Mann School in New York, and his experiences at Harvard have already transformed the Prince into a typical college youth, whose fluent English and general manner of attire are not greatly different from those of Americans.

The present Gaikwar was educated at the Maparajas school at Baroda, under the personal supervision and tuition of F. Elliott, of the Indian Civil Service.

The old order has changed and given place to the new without visible commotion and Baroda now stands on a par with the surrounding British territory. The inhabitants can point to a ruler of their own race who has effected this happy result for them. The Gaikwar has nobly sustained the dignity and character of Indian royalty.

He has not shut himself out from his people, but has gone freely among his subjects, learnig to know them and to ascertain their wants. Under his enlightened rule patronage and honor have not found their way to any particular class or sect. The field has been open to all and the different services have been recruited from the best material available. The highest posts in the Baroda state have been bestowed upon persons of different races and creed hailing from various parts of the country.

The Gaikwar of Baroda's collection of diamonds, pearls and other precious stones is considered one of the greatest in the world. In front of the one-million-dollar palace where the Prince will go to live after leaving Harvard are mounted four solid gold canons which required five years for construction, and which weigh 1600 pounds. The trappings of his father's royal bullocks are said to have cost $200,000. The famous Baroda necklace, strung with 200 brilliants, each as large as a hazelnut, is valued at $12,000,000. In the Gaikwar's collarette of 500 diamonds is found the fifth largest diamond in the world, called the Star of the South. In one room in the royal Baroda palace is a rug four yards square made of diamonds, rubies and pearls interwoven with the golden fabric.

Making a Quinine Hair Tonic

(By Mabel Graham.)

There is no preparation as good for the hair and scalp as a quinine hair tonic when properly made, but most people object to the very high price that this preparation costs.

I find that I can overcome this objection by making my own quinine hair tonic. I simply get from my drug store one ounce of beta-quinol (liquid) in original package and a half pint of alcohol. I then mix the alcohol with half a pint of water (warm water preferred) and add the beta-quinol, or you can use one pint of Bay Rum in place of the alcohol and water, after standing for a few hours it is ready for use. I find this even better than the high priced articles, and a full pint only costs me 65 to 75 cents.

This excellent hair tonic used daily, where there is dandruff or falling hair, will cure the dandruff and stop the falling hair. After a week or two you will find once or twice a week sufficient to keep the scalp in a perfectly healthy condition. This strengthens the roots of the hair, giving the hair life and brilliancy. If you follow my advice you will soon have long, beautiful hair and plenty of it.

Talks on Teeth

The Rex Dental Company

(Incorporated)

Have You Nice Teeth?

If you cannot answer that question in the affirmative, read this article, and follow the advice given. Then you can say yes.

Nice teeth are no longer confined to that privileged few upon whom nature has been overkind.

The discovery of the Rex Dental Co.'s method of supplying missing teeth, without plates, or ordinary bridge work, make it possible for every man and woman to have a beautiful set of teeth, provided they had two or more teeth left in either jaw.

So great has been the demand for these teeth that this Company has had to open offices in four of the principal cities of this country, in order to supply that demand.

Every one realizes that the teeth are of the greatest importance, not alone because nice teeth make for good looks, but that good, serviceable, strong teeth are necessary if one is to keep his stomach in good order.

Thousands are enjoying the Rex Dental Co.'s teeth.

Listen to the testimony of one of our patients, who is glad to allow us to publish his opinion of this godsend to humanity, the wonderful Alveolar system as practiced by the Rex Dental Co.:

The Rex Dental Co.,
Los Angeles, Cal.

Dear Sirs: About six months ago you put in my mouth quite an extensive piece of your Alveolar dentistry. I have had considerable work done at various times, the last work being about three year ago, and consisted of bridge work. You replaced this bridge work by the Alveolar Method, and having had experience with bridges I am in a better position to judge the comfort and satisfaction that can be derived from your system than by the other.

There is no spring attached to the Alveolar system, and I can eat all kinds of food the same as I could when I had my own teeth. Those that you have put in are just as natural as it is possible, and I take great pleasure in recommending you at all times, for your work is certainly worth praise of the highest character.

Yours very truly,
(Signed) CHAS. E. HASTINGS.

MINES AND MINING—Activities in the Ore Districts of the Great Southwest BIG MONEY.

THIRD PAID IN SHORT TIME.

Hubbard Lease at Lucky Boy Ships Heavily.

Hundred Twenty-five Thousand Dollars.

All This in Six Weeks, Yet Another Dividend.

[SPECIAL CORRESPONDENCE OF THE TIMES.]

TONOPAH (Nev.) May 21.—The Hubbard lease on the Mountain King at Lucky Boy continues to ship in the neighborhood of eighty tons a day. The main shaft has attained a depth of 460 feet, with the best of ore in sight. This week the company paid its third dividend, making a total of $125,000 in six weeks, and it is predicted that there will be another special dividend of 50 cents before the middle of next month. The 400-foot level has just started and the miners are taking out a great quantity of ore. Eighty miners are regularly employed under ground and thirty-five sorters on the surface sack the ore, that is in turn loaded on the large freight teams that transport it to Thorne. Superintendent Kendall says that two intermediates between the levels are being opened that will produce a great additional tonnage.

Senator Oddie returned from his property at Carroll Rye, where a large force of miners has been put on, with the intention of sinking a deep working shaft. The claim is well located, being just east of the Lucky Boy and about 300 feet distant from the Mitchell Fairfield lease.

HAWTHORNE CLAIMS.

The Pamlico Company, operating the Pamlico mines, about twelve miles southwest of Hawthorne, sent a shipment of twenty tons to the Premier mill last week. After a two hours' run the plates showed a large quantity of amalgam. Several years ago this property was one of the best producers in the State, but until a few months ago it has been idle owing to contentions among the down East stockholders, a fact that was all the more remarkable when it is known that the mine has immense ore reserves that could easily have been turned into money, as the values were carried in gold.

Shipping ore is being sacked from the McAfee lease at Hawthorne. Good ore was uncovered from the grass roots and as development continued the values increased. Already several tons have been sacked and from this on another regular shipper will be added to the camp.

Millsaps and Hall, who own the Monte Cristo claim, located about one and one-half miles west of Luckyl Boy, sent a trial shipment of five tons to the Premier mill, just above Hawthorne, the first part of the week. After the clean-up was made the result was a gold bar weighing eleven and one-half ounces, which will give a return of $16 per ounce. The shaft on the property has attained a depth of eighty feet, and a good vein is in evidence at the bottom. The owners have several tons sacked that will average $40 that will be sent to the reduction plant within the next few days.

EXTENSION MILL.

Everything is progressing smoothly with the plans for the new mill for the Tonopah Extension, and this week excavating for the building will begin. The mine is in the best of shape for production, vast bodies of milling ore having been blocked; in fact, the most of the work during the past year has been done with an eye to the one object, that of preparing for steady extraction for a long time. On all the levels above the 400 the ore bodies have been thoroughly opened, so that the question of tonnage is not guesswork, but an actually proven fact. Not a ton has been shipped for eight months, all of the quartz having been left standing in the mine or hoisted and placed on the mill dump, so that at the present time there is enough ore in sight to run the new thirty-stamp mill for many months.

In the West End there is little change to note, with the exception of the stope at the top of No. 8 raise, which is showing constant improvement, and where there is exposed the finest body of high-grade ore yet found in the mine. While the entire body carries excellent values, there are streaks and bunches throughout that are of solid metal, some of the assays carrying as high as 2000 ounces in silver and thirty-six ounces in gold. The stope is being extended both east and west, with both ends exposing high grade.

MINE DEVELOPMENT.

The usual aggressive work has been continued by the McNamara and good progress has been made in development and prospecting. A great deal of ore has been exposed and, while stoping has been in progress on the various levels, a great amount of new work is being opened. During the past week the MacNamara began shipping to the Balaklala Copper Company of Shasta, Cal., with whom a good contract has been made. The total shipments amounted to 250 tons, and the company is said to have secured a much better rate than what was received from the American Smelting and Refining Company.

MOVE FROM MILLERS.

It is estimated that the removal of the stamps of the Tonopah mine from Millers, a station some fourteen miles south of this city, would result in a saving of more than $250,000 a year through consolidation of departments and the abolishment of the haul from mine to mill. The company sends out an average of 3500 tons per week, on which the freight rate alone is 50 cents a ton. The company has to maintain a double office force, machine shops, sampling force, etc., that could be combined and some of the high-priced employés cut off. Then the cost of loading and unloading the cars forms a big feature that runs into money. Experts who have reported on this matter think the company could also handle a greater tonnage with the mill at the mine without the present cost of sorting. The cost of the removal is placed at $100,000, which would be more than recovered in the first year. The Tonopah mine owns the Tonopah and Goldfield Railroad, and the mills were erected at a distance from the mine mainly to furnish the railroad with a steady tonnage and constant revenue. This was by the old management, which left the property last year $600,000 in debt, and, according to well-authenticated stories, the builders of both companies had a nice little issue in the town-lot scheme that men are out of the Tonopah and the company is in most excellent financial shape it is not improbable that the directors at their next meeting will approve the suggestion that the mills come back to the mines.

SEVEN TROUGHS.

FAIRVIEW HAS GOOD STRIKE.

THOUSAND-DOLLAR ORE BEING SENT TO SMELTER.

Mazuma Hills Mine to Be Leased to Colorado People on Condition That Sinking Is to Be Continued Without Interruption to Prove the Property to Depth.

[SPECIAL CORRESPONDENCE OF THE TIMES.]

MAZUMA (Nev.) May 21.—A strike which means much to the Fairview mine was made yesterday in the Florence lease. In the drift on the west or main vein, which is undoubtedly the Fairview's, a very rich shoot has just been disclosed on the 200-foot level. Where it was first discovered in the drift it is three feet wide and carries the identical ore that is characteristic of the Fairview. It is a white quartz liberally sprinkled with gold, or to be more accurate, it is gold, sprinkled with quartz. The ore contains a high percentage of silver, and is the same as the Fairview is shipping to the smelter, some of which goes $1000 to the ton. It is expected shortly, or, as soon as the new level is opened, to commence operations on the Florence on a much larger scale. Arrangements are being made with the Darby Nevada Reduction Company to treat the ore locally and, with these effected, the mine is prepared to get out a large tonnage.

The rich float found in the Big Thing group near Farrel has attracted from the outside, as is evidenced by the taking over of the group by a syndicate of San Francisco people through their representative, Kenneth Watson, who has been in the district for several days. The float from the Big Thing Company is literally sprinkled with the yellow metal and runs thousands to the ton.

F. A. Preston of the George English lease went to Lovelock Thursday with the last clean-up of the mill. With each successive run the bullion is getting finer, the last lot running $16 to the ounce. A new shaft has been sunk on the vein, from which all the new ore so far milled has been taken in order to get to the point where the rich streaks on the hanging and footwalls, which are constantly widening, come together. This shaft has been completed to the 50-foot level, and drifting both ways on the vein will commence Monday morning. It is expected that at this point the ore body will be larger and richer. As soon as the ground is opened at this level linking will be resumed for another 50 feet, while the ore is being stoped from this level to that above.

MAZUMA HILLS LEASE.

Following the negotiations which have been pending for several months among the stockholders of the Mazuma Hills Mining Company looking toward the resumption of work on the property, it is learned from unquestionable authority, that an option on the lease of the company's workings has been given to some well-known Colorado capitalists. Ever since the February meeting of the company there has been a division in the ranks of the stockholders over the system of working the property. Some of the stockholders were desirous of starting a working shaft to the west of the tunnel, while others wanted to go deeper in the incline. The option seems to have been a compromise effected to enable the property to resume work.

The lease will run for one or two years, and will carry with it as one of its strictest provisions an obligation to sink continuously. The object of this latter condition is that the company feels that the riches of the mine depend on the development of the lower strata, and as a proof of the fact that the stockholders have not lost faith in their mine is the showing that the treasury has not lost a dollar of its contents. If the Colorado people take hold of it, and there is every reason to believe that they will, the property will be worked upon a much larger scale than before. Besides sinking, crosscuts will be run from the upper levels, and the ground thoroughly prospected, and, in addition, ore will be taken out for treatment at the company mill.

NORTHERN CALIFORNIA.

WANT THE PAY WITHOUT WORK.

FOREIGNERS IN AMADOR MAKE MUCH TROUBLE.

Eight-Hour Law Causes Loafers to Demand More—Operators Who Run Mines on Low-Grade Ore and Small Profit Insist on Full Day and Strike Is on.

[SPECIAL CORRESPONDENCE OF THE TIMES.]

GRASS VALLEY, May 20.—Practically all the mines in Amador county are idle and the men are on strike as a result of a disagreement between the operators and miners over the new eight-hour law. The men, not satisfied with the reduction of their working time to eight hours, demand that this time include coming to and going from work, while the operators insist that eight hours of actual work must be performed. Many of the mines are low grade propositions and are operating on a small margin of profit. If the demands of the men were granted it would mean a largely increased expense, and in some cases would force suspension of activities. The Kennedy, Bunker Hill, Fremont, Argonaut, Keystone, Campo Seco and other leading properties are affected. Many of these have been standard disbursers of dividends and stock is held by many people residing in the East and Southern California.

The strike was instituted by non-union miners, a large majority of whom are Austrians and Italians. The Union organizers are busily engaged in gathering the men into official unions and many of the leaders state that they are anxious to settle the trouble at once, as it does not involve a question of reduction of wages or increase of working hours. In fact, several of the union leaders are not in favor of the continuance of the strike. It is likely that a conference will be held shortly between the men and their employers and an amicable agreement reached. The management of the Campo Seco mines and smelter states that as soon as the available ore has been smelted operations will cease permanently unless the men return to work. The company has been only will not consider the demands for a moment. In all about 800 men are affected and it is feared that the trouble may spread to other districts.

FINAL PAYMENT.

The Gold Mining Hydraulic and Dredging Company of Los Angeles has made final payment on its properties in Plumas county and is arranging for extensive work on the Hydraulic King and Gomez claims. Sixty acres are dredging grounds, but as the debris can be easily disposed of, the placers will be worked by the hydraulic method. Exhaustive tests of the gravel have been made with satisfactory results and approximately four years of development work has been performed. The company has two excellent reservoir sites and controls sufficient water to operate the placers for nine months out of the year. Indications point to the existence of a rich ledge on the property and it is possible that quartz mining will be later undertaken on an extensive scale. Superintendent Fagg is busily completing arrangements for extensive work.

ALLEGHANEY BUSY.

The Sixteen-to-One mine at Alleghany continues to produce phenomonally. Since the discovery in April over $450,000 has been extracted from the thirty-inch vein and it shows improvement as developments progress. It has been opened up for over ninety feet in the course of extending the tunnel on the main ledge, although no stoping is going on. The Bonanza King, Tightner, Rainbow, Omega, Red Star and other mines in the same district are showing up well and producing much rich ore. As a result the greatest boom in the history of Sierra county is in full blast and before many months have elapsed Alleghany promises to be one of the most animated camps in the West.

Operations in the Grass Valley section continues very active with several recently opened properties showing up splendidly. At the North Star extensive work is going on below the 4500-foot level and eighty stamps are dropping on ore averaging around $30 per ton. The vein below the 2000-foot level is six feet wide. About 200 men are employed. The Empire is pushing extensive developments below the 2000 level and keeping forty stamps running constantly. Several rich strikes have been made lately. At the Idaho Maryland forty stamps are in operation and the eight-foot vein on the 500 level has been cut at the 600 and 700 foot points. The work of sinking the shaft from the 1000 level will shortly start. The Santa Barbara people operating the Norambagua and Lecompton mines are rapidly unwatering the properties and will soon be in a position to commence active production. Both properties have excellent records and contain good bodies of milling ore.

TUOLUMNE COUNTY.

At the New Aurum mines, near Tuolumne, the mill has been placed in commission and a good quality of quartz is being treated.

The tunnel at the War Eagle is in over 200 feet and is opening a large section of virgin ground. The ore body is of good size with values running well. At the Hunter arrangements are under way for the unwatering of the shaft to the 400 level, from which point active work will be pushed. Vigorous work is going on at both the Hunter and War Eagle and a good output of ore is maintained. The track from the War Eagle to the mill has been completed, greatly facilitating the economical handling of ore. Work at the Hardtack will be started soon.

The Bagdad-Chase Company has opened its mines near Sousbyville to a depth of 800 feet and is milling a good quantity of milling ore. Amalgamation and concentration are used and an extraction of about 9 per cent. is said to be secured by this means. Fifty men are employed and considerable exploration work is being conducted. C. S. Verrill is manager.

At the Black Oak a big vein of ore running from $6 to $15 per ton is receiving attention. Twenty stamps are dropping constantly and more will be placed in action as soon as the ore supply can be increased. Roger C. Knox is manager.

The properties of the United States Corporation have been taken under a lease by the Erie Mining Company. The cyanide plant has been moved from the Dead Horse mine to a point near the new mill and everything is in readiness for extensive work.

BUTTE DREDGING.

The Butte Creek Consolidated Dredging Company has had its mammoth dredge in operation for several days on Butte Creek and is said to be meeting with splendid success. Over 100,000 cubic yards of gravel are being handled per month and excellent values are recovered. The dredge is operating in one of the richest sections of the State and it is likly that the company will install a second machine before the end of the year. The dredge is working down stream and depositing the tailings on the bank. Later on it will move upstream and return the tailings to the bed of the creek.

The Stanford Mining and Reduction Company of Los Angeles is steadily working the Gold Coin and Stanford properties at Johannesburg with good results. The shaft at the Gold Coin is down 250 feet with about 3000 feet of underground developments. The Stanford shaft is 300 feet deep with a large reserve of milling ore developed. The ore is siliceous quartz and averages from $30 to $60 per ton. The product is treated at the ten-stamp Red Dog mill and auxiliary cyanide plant.

STEIFFER TRIAL STIRS.

The action of S. E. Churchman against the Steiffer Mining Company now on trial at Oroville, is developing many sensations. The large number of Los Angeles stockholders in this company makes the case of peculiar interest to Southern Californians and many of them are taking an active part in the controversy. During the past week several witnesses were put on the stand by the prosecution to bear out the charges that a conspiracy was under way to freeze out the general stockholders, and that funds had been misappropriated. Joseph F. Campbell, a pioneer of the Magalia district, and aged eighty-five years, stated that he had given a bond on the Steiffer property to the defendants for $19,000, of which $2000 was to be paid in cash, another payment of smaller size to be made out of the first $20,000 worth of stock sold, and the balance to be taken in the way of one-half of the profits of the mine until final payment was made. He testified that later the Steiers wanted him to take the $19,000 in stock, and advised him to stay with them and become wealthy. They also offered him an easy job at a good salary. He testified further that defendants told him that they did not intend to drive a tunnel or do any developments until they had first made themselves rich.

One witness stated that he believed the mine had been flooded intentionally, but objections of the defendants' attorneys to this testimony were sustained by the court. The defendants admitted mining $4000 in gold but claimed that they had expended $10,000 previous to the sale of stock. The general allegations of the prosecution were emphatically denied. It is likely that the case will continue for several weeks.

NEVADA MEN DEVELOP INYO.

LOCATIONS ON EDGE OF DEATH VALLEY RICH.

Manhattan Dredging Under Way in Good Shape, But Wild Tales as to Fabulous Wealth Shaded—Florence President Talks of Surprise, But Company Swears to Losses.

[SPECIAL CORRESPONDENCE OF THE TIMES.]

GOLDFIELD (Nev.) May 21.—A sequel to a former excitement that took a crowd of prospectors and locators to the borders of Death Valley three months ago has developed in the shape of one of the most promising districts in either California or Nevada. The first rush was suppressed and the miners who went forth to make locations were led in a direction opposite to where the gold rock was strewn all over the surface. Now it is admitted that J. M. Martin and J. H. Oliver located almost everything in sight, including a water right, mill site and a town site. They have been working their locations ever since last March, and feel that they are safe. Today they came in with specimens of quartz that glisten with native gold and others that carry values in lead, gold and silver.

The find is in Cottonwood Cañon, across the California line in Inyo county, on the northwestern edge of Death Valley, fifty-five miles from Goldfield or forty miles from Bonnie Claire, the nearest railroad station. Through the passing of teams carrying supplies a few others got wise to the find and the result has been that not less than a dozen men have made locations in the same district, but it was not until yesterday that the truth got out. Then E. S. Highley, Art Slaight and Harry Cutler chased out in a big auto and grabbed some of the ground. They returned this evening with a report that confirms everything that has been said. Two streams of water originate some 200 feet above the camp. One is alum water, which cannot be used for domestic purposes, but may be utilized for a mill. The other is a cold, clear spring that is said to contain sufficient water to keep a seven-inch pipe line filled. Reports indicate that there is in place twenty feet of ore on the surface that will run $35 to the ton and other specimens run 30 per cent. lead, five ounces of silver and one and one-half ounces gold. The location is almost inaccessible, and the claims that have been located are in places almost vertical.

MANHATTAN DREDGING.

Dredging operations are about to begin at the Manhattan placers within a few days. This is the most important development in this section since the placers started. A Goldfield company organized by M. A. Nurse of Sacramento, who is said to have had fifteen years experience in dredge work, closed a contract today with the Nevada-California Power Company for 100-horse power with the intention of beginning operations upon an extensive scale.

With compressed air and water under pressure the first dredge will have a six-inch pipe with air and water down to bedrock. The machine will force up the gravel and is expected to throw the stuff at least 200 feet.

The power system will reach Pioneer tonight with a voltage of 6600 or ample to supply the new camp with both light and power to the mines. Electrical service will be placed at the command of Manhattan and Round Mountain next week. Construction is proceeding at the rate of one mile an hour.

STORIES OF FLORENCE.

Thomas Lockhart, president of the Florence Goldfield, returned from meeting with the other directors in Denver and stated that orders had been placed for a tube mill that will enable the Florence mill to utilize the forty stamps for which the mill was built, but of which only thirty have ever been dropped at any one time. Mr. Lockhart was furious over the reports that have been printed in the newspapers, and asserted repeatedly that the mill was running as smoothly as any mill could. He characterized some of the rumors as downright lies and intimated that during the first week in June when there will be another meeting of the directors, that the report would disclose a series of surprises for the stockholders. Speaking of a resumption of dividends, he said that something would be forthcoming next month, but beyond treating the subject in a general way he refused to be drawn out.

VIGILANCE COMMITTEE.

The citizens of Manhattan have organized a vigilance committee to protect claim holders from jumpers, who have been growing active during the past week. This committee will listen to all complaints and there will be no appeal from the decision. C. W. Bartle of Los Angeles, who is said to be an expert placer miner, with experience in Colorado, Mexico and British Columbia, states that in all his experience he has never worked ground equal to the Manhattan placers, but he states that the placers here are not a poor man's proposition and that large capital is required to work them.

John S. Cook, vice-president of the John S. Cook Bank of Goldfield, has associated himself with William Kern, also of this city, for the operation of 300 feet on the Black Cat claim that has been the property of J. H. Fulkerson. The Chindren-Brown-Wilson lease is washing thirty-five yards of gravel and the leasers expect to clean up $700 to $1000 out of the run. The Sunrise Company, which recently took over the ground of "Dry Wash" Wilson on the Wolf Tone Extension, is the strongest aggregation of capital in the field. All the machinery is on the ground and the work of installation will begin this week. The company is working eight men three shifts, and will enlarge its force as soon as the machinery is in place. The dirt that is being washed is taken from the north rim of the channel and is running about $10 per yard. In the channel the gravel went better than $15. The Sunrise Company consists of Thomas D. Murphy, A. A. Bissell, A. E. Barnes, J. L. Davis, G. S. Johnson and J. F. Douglass, all of Goldfield.

AFTER TAX DODGERS.

Esmeralda county is going to make an example of some of the companies that have defaulted on their bullion tax collections as there is an evident attempt on the part of several to evade the law which calls for the payment of taxes on the net product.

This week the first case will be filed against the Florence Goldfield in an attempt to collect a penalty assessed for not making the returns that the law calls for. This company in a sworn statement asserts that it has operated at an actual loss during the past three months in spite of the glowing reports that have been given out by the officers of the company.

The most reckless statements, however, are credited to the Pittsburgh Silver Peak mine at Blair, which offers to pay taxes on a net production of $8000. The collector's statement says that his investigations proved the company to have swollen its figures by $94,926.89 by adding that sum to the total of the expenses as they are checked from the books of the company. Included in the accounts are such items as expenses of office in Pittsburgh $10,725.90 for three months. Assessment work is also charged as is surveying, insurance and maintenance of buildings and transportation. The company also owns and operates a railroad, water and light plants for the town and other enterprises from which revenue is derived. In the face of the statement that the company made net earnings of $8000 during the last quarter, it is said to appear from the books and reports to stockholders that there was a profit of $103,000 for the same period. Further the annual report of the president shows that there was a gross production of $850,000 for the year and a net profit close to $350,000.

Notwithstanding these studied attempts to hold down the reported production of the mines in Esmeralda county, the total bullion production reported to the Assessor amounts to $2,514,297.57 for the quarter. Steps have been taken to verify these figures where there is any doubt of the companies padding their expense accounts and it is probable that the revenue of the State and county will be materially increased by the scrutiny.

MANHATTAN VALUES.

The men who went in with the Manhattan rush three weeks ago are beginning to be heard from with receipts of nuggets that run between $500 and $1080 per day. Most of the time has been occupied in getting machinery into operation and developing water but now the various washeries are about ready for operation. The result has been to scale down some of the exaggerations about the richness of the gravel which is now said to run closer to $10 per yard rather than the wild figures of $50 and $80 as first claimed.

CONSOLIDATED COPPER.

A nine-foot vein carrying considerable copper and fair values in gold was exposed in the bottom of the Victor shaft on the C.O.D. Consolidated at a depth of 410 feet. It is believed to be the same vein that has been under development for some time on the 200 and 300 levels but that the main ore shoot has not yet been entered. The vein was cut in sinking the sump after a station had been cut on the 400 level. The opening of the vein to this point proves the continuity of the lode and the present showing is very encouraging for an important body of ore. No attempt has been made for production on the upper levels for some time during the sinking of the shaft, but, as soon as it can be done conveniently, stoping will be resumed above the 300 level in addition to a probably heavy production from the 400 when the ground is opened for that purpose.

OTHER PROPERTIES.

Development that promises to bring results in the way of extending the producing area of the district is in progress on the Marquette lease on the Alhambra claim of the Talmage group on the east side of Vindicator mountain. A very promising streak of ore is being followed by a drift at a depth of 150 feet and great possibilities are expected from continued development of the shoot. The ore is quite heavy in copper and is similar in appearance to the copper streak that is being developed on the Victor vein of the C.O.D. The values across the eighteen inches of ore are still slightly below pay, averaging about $28, but the entire vein is practically quartz, clear across the breast of the drift, both walls being well defined and the general indications promising for a good ore body. H. H. Honore, father of Mrs. Potter Palmer of Chicago, is the financial head of the lease.

CINCINNATIANS BUY AURORA AT SPRINGDALE.

Plan to Install Modern Mill and Are Inspecting Consolidated at Goldfield—Mayflower Captured by Eisen Faction and Superintendent Is Ousted.

[SPECIAL CORRESPONDENCE OF THE TIMES.]

RYOLITE (Nev.) May 21.—R. H. Vaughn, general manager of the Blue Ridge Fast Freight Line operating over the Chesapeake and Ohio Railroad, was the leader of a party of Cincinnati capitalists who spent three days in the district this week. The other members were: F. L. Garrison, one of the big zinc and lead mine operators of Missouri and the owner of large tracts of coal lands in West Virginia; J. W. and W. W. Crothers, manufacturers; E. G. Lutz, a prominent manufacturer of Milwaukee, and W. E. Isbell, one of the best known engineers of the United States.

They spent several weeks en route in Arizona and New Mexico inspecting various forms of investments, but had for their objective point Springdale, north of this camp, with the intention of taking an option on the Aurora Bullfrog, which they exercised. After an examination of the property they decided that the investment was good, since the veins on the surface carried fair values, and the engineers reported that the formation was of a permanent character. It is generally understood that the new purchasers have decided to erect a large mill of probably 100 stamps, with a capacity of 600 tons per day, and they will go from here to Goldfield to examine the mill of the Consolidated, which is conceded to be the most modern plant in the world today.

In speaking of the prospects of Nevada, Mr. Vaughn grew intensely enthusiastic, saying: "I believe that you have only commenced to mine in Nevada, and that within the next few months this State will startle the world with its output. Now that the State has settled down to a legitimate mining basis, with an anti-wildcat law, the legitimate mining man has displaced the wildcatter, and the production has been almost sufficient to stagger the outsider, you can bet that the financial centers of the East are again taking note of Nevada, and that money will begin coming in before long."

The Aurora Bullfrog comprises eighteen claims of 360 acres, an estate large enough to warrant the construction of a mill that can rely upon a supply of ore to keep it going for an indefinite period.

MAYFLOWER'S TROUBLES.

At the special meeting of the directors of the Mayflower, the Eisen faction was upheld, and the resignation of Sidney Addlton, the superintendent, was requested. This move places the entire property of the mine and mill under the absolute control of Gus Eisen, who proposes to institute certain changes that will add materially to the output.

Floatstone.

GOLDFIELD (Nev.) April 23.—[To the Editor of The Times:] I am sending you a small sample taken from a very large deposit near the T. & T. Railroad in the southern part of Nye county, Nevada.

What kind of substance is it? It will float on water and it seems to stand fire well. Is there any commercial value to it? Thanking you in advance for an answer, Yours very truly,

A. T. P.

ANSWER: Your sample is a variety of quartz resembling somewhat the trachyte of Southern Utah. Like pumice (of which it consists in part) it floats in water. There is some alumina with a small per cent. of iron peroxide in the specimen.

Why not offer the material to buyers looking for a substance to make a combination wall plaster, or to users of abrasives? There is a market for it, sure, and profits depend on costs of mining and transportation.

Freight bills could not be higher than those charged on a variety shipped from near Mount Shasta to San Francisco, and used for the purposes outlined at a profit. Your locality is somewhat less in mileage than the section indicated.

Five Samples.

SEARCHLIGHT (Nev.) April 24.—[To the Editor of The Times:] Will you kindly tell me in "In the Earth" columns the name of the rocks herewith submitted to you? Are they of any value? What should they be assayed for? I send you four samples which come from Lincoln county, Nevada, and about six miles from Searchlight. No. 1 is, I think, "rosin-jack," or volcanic glass; the rock came from a ledge three feet down. No. 2 may be native copper, or red iron, in spots; it comes from a ledge five feet down in a schist formation. No. 3 I believe is porphyry. I would like to know if it carries nickel; it comes, also, from a ledge five feet down. No. 4 is, I think volcanic glass or lime; the rock comes from a ledge three feet down, and there is a large body of it on top of mountain. Oblige, with thanks. W. F.

ANSWER: No. 1 is not "rosinjack" (blende,) it is part fluorine with zinc present. No. 2 is hematite (iron peroxide,) part of it being "Indian war paint." It carries no quicksilver. No. 3 is porphyritic rock with dendritic manganese (forest rock) present, and does not react for nickel. No. 4 is crystallized calcite (limestone.) Nos. 2 and 3 may carry gold values.

Shaly Slate.

LOS ANGELES, April 25.—[To the Editor of The Times:] Accompanying this please find sample from near the foot of Santiago Peak. Will you please tell me what it is, and if you consider it (of itself) an indication of anything of commercial value. Thanking you in advance, I am,

Yours very respectfully, E. E. B.

ANSWER: The deposit from which sample was taken may probably be confused with coal or petroleum indications. Both substances in small quantities might be obtained from the locality stated.

"Of itself," however, the sample represents no indicator of a commercially valuable field for coal or petroleum.

Impure Fire Clay.

TEHACHEPI, April 26.—[To the Editor of The Times:] I send a sample of clay or shale by mail. Local. I would like to know the name it is given, and if possible, if it is likely to have any value, and for what?

Yours truly, D. T. C.

ANSWER: Offer the impure substance to dealers in fire clay.

Pseudomorph.

LOS ANGELES, April 26.—[To the Editor of The Times:] The inclosed sample was left at The Times office by Mr. R. G. D., with resquest that analysis be published under "In the Earth" heading.

Yours truly, THE T. M. CO.

ANSWER: From what approximate locality is the mineral taken? We should comply with paragraphs at head of column. The sample is slate and dotted throughout the mass with pseudomorph after pyrite, calling for a quantitative analysis.

Porphyritic Rock.

INDIO, April 27.—[To the Editor of The Times:] I inclose a sample of rock taken from a six foot ledge 8 miles south of India. What kind of rock is it? Has it any commercial value?

Respectfully, C. H. H.

ANSWER: Calcite is present in the rock, with iron oxides, and traces of zinc. Not tested for precious metals.

Pyrgom Variety.

SAN BERNARDINO, April 29.—[To the Editor of The Times:] Herewith a piece of rock from range five miles southeast of Daggett, Cal. It evidently contains some lime and silica, as too hard for straight lime, and I thought perhaps a per cent. of borax from its location.

Will you please inform me through the "In the Earth" column what it contains and the correct name?

Yours truly, W. B. C.

ANSWER: Sample does not react for boron. Qualitative analysis shows silicate of lime and magnesia with zinc and lead present.

Ores of Tin.

LOS ANGELES, April 27.—[To the Editor of The Times:] I desire the mineralogical names of some of the commercial ores of tin, together with localities of some western United States deposits. If my request is within the purview of your "In the Earth" department, I will be obliged to you for an answer in your columns.

Yours respectfully, W. F. W.

ANSWER: There is a borate of cium and tin, carrying 53.75 per tin dioxide; it is known as Nordenoldine in mineralogy, and derives name "in honor of the Swedish eralogist." It is well for prospe in the borax districts of the to familiarize themselves with name of the mineral. It should found in California.

Cassiterite (tin ore or tin stone) an oxide of tin, and probably, the ore of the metal. Stannite (tin rites, or bell-metal ore) is a sulp of tin, combined with copper, iron sometimes with zinc. Stannite be obtainable in Nevada and Cal nia. Wood tin is a variety of ca ite: "In botryoidal and reniform ney) shapes, concentric in struc and radiated fibrous internally, though very compact, with the brownish, of mixed shades, lo somewhat like dry wood, in its Toadseye tin is the same on a sm scale." Stream tin is also cassi "in the state of sand."

Ores in tin occur in California, Temescal, San Bernardino county, Washington, near Spokane, at points in the Black Hills of Dakota, and at the "Sally Cavan mine," near Oroville, a station on Burlington and Missouri River road (near Custer, S. D.,) cassi is obtainable, carrying over 75 per tin. Tin ores occur in the Fra Mountains, near El Paso, Tex.

Iron Oxides and Pegmatite.

PERRIS, April 28.—[To the Ed of The Times:] I inclose you samples of rock. Nos. 1, 2, 3 got near Julian, San Diego county, would like to know through your "the Earth" department what they tain if anything of value. Thank you in advance, I am Respectfully, L. A. S.

ANSWER: No. 1 is low-grade tite. No. 2 acicular limonite, an ide of iron. No. 3 impure pegm (graphic granite) with tourmalina and "peacock iron." No. 4 altered (pseudomorphic) crystal magnetite. Samples are poor mens and of very doubtful comm value.

Cocolite and Iron Oxides.

ANSWER: Your black sample not corundum. It is a variety of roxene, which occurs of two "White and green. Both are fr varieties of pyroxene, the former which may be referred to the species diopside." This sample consists of small granules of irreg shape, coherent and 7 in the scale hardness.

The yellow-brownish splotches ide throughout the mass of your ond sample is not copper, it is limo (yellow oxide of iron) with lead tra probably, occurring as a mixture lead ochre (massicot.)

Yours truly, E. I.

ANSWER: Selenic acid is the single acid that dissolves gold. solvents are aqua regia, sodium potassium cyanide. Salt (so chloride) bichromate of potash and phuric acid, chlorine bromine permanganate of potash with phuric acid, are some of the gold ents.

Your aqua regia question "res formation" is not clearly understood By taking, however, one volume nitric acid, and two (or three) umes of hydrochloric acid—both to be chemically pure and not d —and when decomposed nitrosyl ide and nitroxyle chloride are for CONVICTION IS PLEASING ALL.

MINERS GLAD THAT UNCLE SAM NABS FAKERS.

Ben Found Guilty of Robbing the Public Through Selling Stock in Arizona Mines Had Bad Records as Republican Liars—Suckers no Doubt Plentiful Yet.

[SPECIAL CORRESPONDENCE OF THE TIMES.]

PHOENIX (Ariz.) May 21.—Satisfaction is generally expressed by mining men in Arizona over the conviction in Kansas City of the Horn brothers, R. E. May and S. H. Snider, found guilty of crimes of the mails in connection with advertising matter promoting the sale of stock in the Two Queens Company, which had mining property above Winkleman in Pinal county. While this case is no more flagrant than many others that have been tried the last few years in the Southwest, it simply happened that to be one of which notice was taken by the government. Ordinarily, stockholders get their gaudy certificates in the bottom of a tin box and try to forget their experience. The Two Queens Company really had a mine and it is said to be a very good one, but the promoters of heaven have hardly been described as richer than the same matter exploited by the Horns.

A fresh crop of dupes, however, is always to be found in the East and it is not expected that this single prosecution will stop the thievery that has been so destructive to the legitimate mining industry of the Southwest. It is an illustration of the mendacity of some of the promoters is remembered a man near Wickenburg, where the promoter and a Pullman carload of prospective investors reached a mine just a day ahead of the sale of the property and its machinery under foreclosure, the promoter selling an immense quantity of stock on the return journey, after all title that he or his associates might have had in the concern had been sold out by the sheriff.

LEWISOHN AT RAY.

Considerable investigation has been made during the last week around the property controlled by the Lewisohns at Ray. The mines were visited by Walter A. Lewisohn, son of the great copper factor; Adolph Lewisohn, and president of the Ray Central Company; J. Parke Channing, a mining expert for the Lewisohns; Louis A. Wright, manager of the Miami property near Globe, and Harvey W. Weed, expert in the employ of the Lewisohns.

This party spent a day at the great mine in the Bill Williams district, a property which is understood to have been offered to their syndicate. Phillip Wiseman, manager of the Lewisohn properties at Ray and of the reduction works at Kelvin, states that the new concentrating mill will soon be under construction, with at least 500 men on the company's pay roll. This mill will have initial capacity of 2000 tons a day. Mr. Wiseman at present time is studying closely the character of the ore and methods which seem best suited for its reduction in the most economical manner. This is being done in the company's small mill at Kelvin. There is a possibility that the new mill may not be built at Kelvin, but at a point a few miles eastward, where better dumping ground can be obtained for the slimes. The company lately was notified to cease dumping its tailings into the Gila River, occupying the same status in this regard as the Detroit, Arizona Copper companies, around Clifton.

W. B. Twitchell and W. T. Smith, the men who floated the Kelvin-Calumet Company, have organized a new corporation, the Ray Northern, which has taken over the Mayflower group of thirteen claims, two miles north of Ray. About 5000 feet of development work has been done on the property already. The Venture Company, one of the strongest mining syndicates, has acquired possession of the Maguire group in Mohave county and will put the property one of the largest mills in the Territory.

The ten-stamp mill of the Arizona Copper Company near Kingman is to be enlarged at once by the addition of fifty more stamps.

MOHAVE COUNTY.

The Colorado River Dredging Company has completed its new Dubois plant at a cost of $100,000 and will launch it as soon as high water comes in the Colorado River. The company will dredge the lower bars by means of suction pumps. Three companies are preparing to handle gold-bearing gravel along the Colorado River between Nevada and Arizona.

VARIOUS PROPERTIES.

The mill of the Monica mine, Kirkland district has been closed after two months' run and will not be operated again until very important changes have been made in the machinery and processes. While the assays are very satisfactory, the returns from the runs showed that only a part of the values were saved and that no profit was being made by the stockholders. The mine has been opened to the depth of 1100 feet, with exposures of large bodies assaying from $12 to $15 to the ton.

The Blue Bell mine near Humboldt is to be pumped out and operated with electrical power furnished from the Humboldt smelter. A. S. Dwight, a mining engineer, who has been looking over the Humboldt smelter, has gone to New York for an indefinite stay while the Humboldt plant is being overhauled, with a view to correcting any deficiencies before starting again. Mr. Dwight says, "The situation is exceedingly complicated and many preliminaries remain to be arranged before the smelter can resume. The ore supply has been carefully looked into and the prospect is somewhat better than first appeared."

Monthly shipments of 700 tons, together with four carloads of high-grade concentrates, are going to the El Paso smelter from the Gladstone mine, south of Prescott, where seventy-five miners are employed, working in drifts as deep as 1100 feet. Power is to be secured soon from the Arizona Power Company much lessening the present operating costs.

A rich copper mine whose existence has been known for fifteen years but which has until lately been lost to the prospectors has been found at Sycamore Creek on the opposite side of the Verde Valley from Jerome. One of the discoverers, City Marshal Fred Hawkins of Jerome, has gone to Los Angeles to secure financial assistance for its development.

The Assessor of Gila county has found that the Globe district produced last year metals valued at $5,051,955; of which $4,900,225 was copper, $64,732 was silver, and $49,518 was gold.

As a vast amount of water will be needed for the new concentrator of the Miami Copper Company near Globe, the company has secured an option on the surplus water from the Old Dominion mine, though it has developed some water in its own property and lately purchased water rights in the Miami Valley. A three-compartment shaft has been started on the Eureka property of the Cordova Mining Company at Miami.

In Yuma county the North Star mine is generally considered the greatest gold property ever known in Arizona. It is producing about $50,000 a month in gold bullion, from ore dug by forty men. It is one of the newest of the Arizona mines, its product period beginning last September.

WINCHESTER WORK.

Development is going ahead in a satisfactory manner in the Winchester neighborhood, where the owners are well content to contemplate the possibilities of a $30-a-ton mine and have ceased speculating on the likelihood of getting a "glory hole" on every claim. The Big Horn Company is sinking a 150-foot shaft on the contact of a great lime dyke. Free gold continues to be found in the foot wall in the shaft of the Anaconda mine. E. A. Haggott is prospecting with a shaft on a good-looking quartz blowout. The shaft of the Calcite mine is down 150 feet, more than half of it in sulphide, the copper being speckled in places with gold and silver. C. W. Reed of Roswell, New Mexico has purchased eleven claims for $3000 cash, though absolutely no work had been done on the property, except raising the location monuments.

A permanent water supply has been developed on the old Vulture property near Wickenburg, at the depth of 513 feet. Heretofore it has been believed that no good water could be obtained in that locality and the supply for the mill had to be pumped from the Hassayampa River, fourteen miles distant. A small amount of water was pumped from the mine, but it could not be used for drinking purposes.

Another Southwestern experience with traction engines has proven a failure. The engine for hauling ore from the Helvetia mine to Vail station has been succeeded by twelve-horse teams.

Report that the Copper Queen Company at Bisbee was about to lay off men was denied by General Manager Walter Douglas, who states that the company is more likely to add men than to discharge them.

A new and large pumping plant is being set at the April Fool shaft of the Calumet and Arizona Company at Courtland.

Near Courtland have been found several deposits of clear blue turquoise.

James Douglas, twenty years manager of the Phelps-Dodge mines near Nacozari, has resigned and has established his residence at Douglas. The Nacozari mines employ about 800 men and produce about 1400 tons a day, transported from the mines at Pilares to the new concentrator at Nacozari. Mr. Douglas has been succeeded at Nacozari by J. S. Williams.

Frederick Hellman has returned to the Tigre mine south of Douglas to make a supplemental inspection of the property on behalf of an eastern syndicate which has taken an option on two-thirds of the capital stock for a consideration of $3,900,000.

DEVELOPER REPLACING THE OLD PROSPECTOR.

Mary G. and Anaconda Claims Are Showing Nicely—Angelano Has the First Named—Old Yellow Bird Mine Is to Reopen Very Shortly. Other Work.

[SPECIAL CORRESPONDENCE OF THE TIMES.]

WINCHESTER (Ariz.) May 9.—The past two weeks have seen a great change in this district, from the prospector and locator to the developer. Lately several new outfits have come and started to develop their properties. Good showings are becoming prevalent in a district which was at first largely overlooked. The part which is coming to the front is that part of it lying along the great rhyolite and andesite dykes, which cut across the country.

One of the best strikes which has been made lately and one which gives every promise of being a big proposition is that made by C. W. White. His property consists of three claims called the Mary G. group, located about one mile from Winchester and near the Anaconda property. They are on the southwest side of the great andesite dyke, and the Anaconda is on the northeast side. The Anaconda is about 200 yards from the main dyke, while the Mary G. is located right on the dyke, the claims lying on both sides and covering about 1000 feet of it. The strike was made in a quartz ledge which dips directly for the great dyke, and assays made from the ore taken out show rich values in gold, silver, lead and copper. The copper appears in the form of pyrites and the lead and silver in galena.

Not much work has been done, but the ledge on the surface where operations started was only about six inches wide, but at a depth of ten feet has widened out to fully four feet, and the values are getting better with depth. The foot wall for the ledge is basalt. The basalt dyke on this property is about fifty feet wide. It is estimated that the andesite dyke will be reached at a depth of about 300 feet. The geological formation is right. Mr. White is an experienced mining man and states that he expects to start re-velopment soon. Assay values from the surface show values running from $50 to over $100. Samples taken for 200 feet on the quartz ledge all pan long strings of gold, not fine gold, but very coarse gold, some of the pannings running into the hundreds of dollars per ton. The Mary G. lays adjacent to the First Chance, an old patented claim, and also near the Sitting Bull, also patented.

DEVELOPMENT ON ANACONDA.

The Anaconda property is now working two shifts sinking. A contract has been let for a 100-foot shaft, which will be sunk on the incline following the vein. At the surface the vein was about a foot wide, but at a depth of fifteen feet it has widened out to over ten feet, all of which is good shipping ore. The pay streak is about six inches wide and very high in gold; in fact every bit from the pay streak shows the ore to be filled with free gold, some of it regular picture rock. The foot wall has been determined and it is a great dyke of basalt, which also assays good values in gold and silver. The hanging wall is diorite. Without doubt this property is the bonanza of the camp and will be one of its big mines. The principal interesting feature of this property is that the formation is regular and the values appear in clearly-defined walls, with every indication of permanency. The Anaconda is the principal source of attraction for the district, and during the past two days many strangers have visited the mine. The Anaconda camp is growing rapidly and new boasts of a boarding-house and ten tent houses.

Adjoining the Anaconda on the east are the Billikens Nos. 1 and 2, belonging to Mills & Bourkin of Salt Lake, who have started a shaft. Assays from this property show also good values and the ore is similar to the Anaconda, which is on the same ledge as the Anaconda and the formation is the same.

Adjoining the Billikens on the east is the Salome View, which belongs to the same parties, which also shows good ore, and adjoining the Salome View is the Mildred M. and Victor, which belong to A. L. Engledow and associates of Raton, N. M. The Mildred M. and Victor are on the big andesite dyke, about three miles east of the Mary G. and Anaconda. Engledow is running a drift in on the contact between the andesite and schist, using the andesite for a foot wall. The vein matter is about four feet wide and shows excellent values. This is one of the first discovery holes ever run directly on this great dyke, and the results which are being obtained show that the best mineralization of the district will be found on these great andesite and rhyolite dykes. Mr. Engledow states that he expects to put a force developing soon.

One of the oldest mines in the district is the Yellow Bird, about two miles west of Winchester, owned by Californians who are now in the district, and have given out the information that work will be resumed on this rich property. Several parties who have claims near the Yellow Bird who are working and within another week or so there will be a lot of development there.

PROPERTY ADJOINING DUPLEX SHOWS WELL.

Railroad Will Be Had Before End of Year to Nevada Victor Property at Crescent—Pompeii Gives Quick Returns—Is Lively in Nob Hill and Canyon Districts.

[SPECIAL CORRESPONDENCE OF THE TIMES.]

SEARCHLIGHT, May 21.—The Duplex Contact, adjoining the Duplex proper, on the east, has its incline timbering the first 100 mark. The showing is such that the management, in Los Angeles, has sent word to Superintendent Knight requesting him to submit figures looking to the immediate installation of an up-to-date machinery plant, this to include necessary buildings. The hornings are said to indicate values from $8 to $20. All along it has been expected that at a depth of between 100 and 150 feet one of the east-west shoots of the Duplex would be cut.

George P. Spittall, who has successfully promoted the Nevada Victor property at Crescent, is out with a statement that before the end of this year he will have built, or induced others to build, a line from his Victor property to a connection with either the Santa Fé at this point or the Salt Lake road near Nipton. Commencing with this week the Victor's new stamp mill was expected to operate continuously.

Mat Hovec and associates, who recently acquired the Pompeii property, about three miles north of town, are getting quick returns. They secured the new Le Roy ten-stamp mill on the adjoining group of claims, and are having no trouble in keeping it going on an excellent grade of ore. They admit that the results have thus far much exceeded expectations.

In the Nob Hill and Cañon district, twenty miles north, there is much of interest. Superintendent Taylor of the new smelter has just returned from a second flying trip to the East, and as a result of same it is reported there will soon be lively doings about that property. Ore buying is to commence quickly. However, exceeding that in interest, it is said that this company has decided to put in a good-sized concentrating plant, one that will not only serve for its own Rich Hill ore, but also do custom work.

Other fresh activities in some section include the recent financing of the Eldorado-Occidental, better known as Hunsaker's property. Buffalo parties recently came out and took all the stock that was available; and, as a result, a mill will be built as soon as sufficient water is developed. The Nevada Eagle, down 235 feet, is being equipped with a large hoist, and also a general line of buildings. The Deeping Eldorado is about ready to start up its new fifteen-horse-power hoist. D. J. Callahan has started work on the Copper Prince group. The Capitol group has reverted to the owner ship of Monahan & Murphy, and eight miners are working.

Turquois.

PASADENA, April 27.—[To the Editor of The Times:] Sample herein was sent to me from near Oak Springs, Nev., by a prospector. What I am desirous of knowing is, is it turquoise? If turquoise is it equal to the New Mexico turquoise? Thanking you in advance for answering my questions in the "In the Earth", I am,
Yours truly, W. Y.
ANSWER: The sample submitted is inferior to the New Mexico turquoise. It lacks the "true blue" color.

Difference Was in the Price.

The June bride frowned.
"The tomatoes," she said, "are just twice as dear as those across the street. Why is it?"
"Ah, ma'am, these"—and the grocer smiled—"these are hand-picked."
She blushed.
"Of course," she said, hastily; "I might have known. Give me a bushel, please."—[Harper's Weekly.

Lived With Broken Liver.

A colored man who died recently at the Metropolitan Hospital, New York, was found at the autopsy to have been living with his liver broken in two. So surprising was the discovery that Dr. O'Hanlon immediately summoned Prof. Larkin of the College of Physicians and Surgeons, a leading pathologist; Prof. Otto H. Schultze of Cornell University, and Dr. Timothy D. Lehane of the Coroner's office. After viewing the organ they agreed that the discovery was of the utmost value to the medical and surgical world. All said the fact that the man did not die at the time of his injury years ago was remarkable, as there was no record of a case where, after a complete rupture of the liver, the individual survived.—[Philadelphia Press.

No Endless Chain Wanted.

Both father and mother struggled valiantly to teach little Effie to repeat the letter "A." The child emphatically refused to pronounce the first letter of the alphabet, and after many vain efforts the father retired from the fight discouraged. The mother took the little girl on her lap and pleaded with her affectionately.
"Dearie, why won't you learn to say 'A'?" she asked.
"Because, mamma," explained Effie, "des as soon as I say 'A' you an' papa will want me to say 'B'."—[Harper's Weekly.

Fifty-nine Known Metals.

There are at least fifty-nine metals known to the chemist. At the dawn of history there were only four—copper, tin, gold and silver. Three more were added by ancient civilisation—iron, lead and mercury. These seven were all that were known to classic antiquity and for the first thousand years of the Christian era. It is believed that copper, because found most abundantly in the pure state, was the first to attract the attention of primitive man. Tin was probably the second, the largest deposits being in those regions longest inhabited by the human race. Iron came into general use between a thousand and fifteen hundred years before the Christian era.—[Exchange.

Shoes for Alaskan Dogs.

"The dogsmith will soon be busy in Alaska," said a miner of the Yukon. "He'll have his work cut out for him, too. The winter promises to be very severe.
"The dogsmith," the miner went on, "shoes, of course, dogs, or he wouldn't have such a name. The sledge dogs of Alaska have day by day to run over miles of rough ice that is as hard on the feet as broken glass. And hence were they not shod they would soon grow so incurably lame that they'd have to be killed.
"Yes, there is a need for the dogsmith up there. He shoes the dogs very neatly in a shoe made of wadding and leather."—[Exchange.

Products of the Lemon.

About one-third of the total lemon crop of Sicily is consumed in the manufacture of citrate of lime, and from the peel of these same lemons comes an enormous quantity of essential oil, or essence of lemon, which furnishes practically the world's supply, and finally, even the peel itself is exported in brine to be candied.—[Exchange.

LOS ANGELES FIRE LADDIES IN ACTION

AERIAL IDEAS.

BY R. W. REMY.

AERIAL fire fighting may seem a fantastic conception in even this day of scientific marvels, but it may become a necessity if limitations are not placed on the skyscraping craze which still has a grip on some builders. The nearest approach now is found in the aërial truck and the water tower, which have become indispensable features of modern equipment. Without these ingenious devices for piercing the air, the department would be powerless to cope with a blaze in the larger buildings of Los Angeles. The local department is strictly up to date, however, and if aërial fire fighting ever comes into vogue this city will be one of the very first to get into line. So, by way of suggestion, I have endeavored to show how the department may look in action fifty years, more or less, from now.

NEW, BUT UP TO DATE.

Los Angeles' fire department has not been long out of its swaddling clothes, but none need fear to hold it up in comparison with departments of other cities of equal size. It is only about eight years since call men were employed in the department, and only twenty-three years since the city relied wholly upon volunteers for protection against fire. Comparatively new a the fire department is, there are now twenty-six engine-houses, with modern equipment and full crews. Two more will be put in service this summer. There are on the rolls of the department 260 men, including officers and employés of every branch.

Only four men have occupied the post of fire chief since the paid department was established, in 1886. The first was Walter S. Moore. Then came Daniel A. Moriarity and Thomas Strohm. Walter Lips, the present chief, is serving his fifth year. Daniel Moriarity, the first chief, only recently returned to the service as telephone operator at headquarters, after having been out for ten years. He is a veteran fire fighter, having joined the volunteer department in 1882. He was twice elevated to the post of Chief.

CHIEF FROM THE RANKS.

Chief Lips entered the service as a call man in 1894. In those days only a driver and engineer at each house were paid for full time. All the hosemen were callmen. That is, they were paid $20 a month and slept in the engine-houses, but during the day were permitted to engage in some outside business, which would not prevent them responding to an alarm. When all the men in the department were put on full salary in 1900, Lips was appointed a hoseman, and he served consecutively as tillerman, driver and engineer, acting lieutenant, and acting captain. He was with the water tower crew when he was made Chief. As an executive officer the Chief has shown more than ordinary ability, and he has continued in the post under successive administrations, Republican, Democratic and Independent. Like every other veteran fire fighter he has had a few thrilling experiences, but he is not given to boasting of his record.

LONG SERVICE REWARDED.

All of the captains are men who have risen from the ranks. Capt. S. A. Lennon of Company No. 3, which is stationed in the headquarters building on South Hill street, has been in the service since 1892. Previous to that time he was a callman. He is familiarly known among his comrades as "Baldy." It has been said of him that he never smiles on duty. Capt. Queirolo of No. 5, is a native son. He has been in the service eleven years. The oldest man in the department in point of continuous service is William Barr, captain of No. 8, who got his first appointment in 1886. C. B. Casey is the ranking battalion chief. He has been in the service seventeen years.

Risks of life and limb by firemen are so common that deeds of heroism which often thrill the public are regarded by them only as routine. W. W. Tibbets, who is the youngest engineer in the department, demonstrated his coolness and nerve in a trying situation on the night of May 14, 1904. The company to which he was then attached, was responding to an alarm when the driver was hurled from his seat by the lurching of the wagon. The horse was dashing at full speed down the street, and without a hand at the reins a collision or spill that meant disaster was inevitable. Tibbets, who was on the rear of the wagon, quickly realized that something must be done, and at the risk of being dashed to death, he climbed over the wagon to the vacant seat and brought the team away team under control

HOW TO CURE YOUR STOMACH TROUBLE

People who have stomach disorders are never in good health. They are continually suffering from one thing or another.

As long as your food digests properly the machinery of the body works in harmony, but put the stomach out of commission and the whole machinery goes to smash. You know that if you are a sufferer from weak stomach or dyspepsia.

When your food fails to digest, it ferments and creates poisons, which are absorbed by the blood. Then the organs dependent upon the stomach for nourishment receive poisonous matter instead. Disease is the result. You can't cure it until you cure the stomach, and you can't cure the stomach until you restore its vitality.

The stomach fails because its vitality is overtaxed—too much work and not enough motive power to do it. Renew this power and the stomach will work as nature intended. Drugs won't restore it because they tear down vitality. You can force the stomach with strong stimulants, but that won't cure it.

Electricity is the power that creates vitality and energy. If you want to restore the activity of a weak organ you must restore electricity where it is needed.

Dr. McLaughlin's Electric Belt is a device for saturating the body with a powerful stream of electric life for hours at a time. It fills the nerves and vitals with new energy, and gives new strength to every part of the body.

My method of electric treatment has cured thousands of cases of stomach trouble and many other chronic complaints after doctors' drugs had failed. I have the evidence to prove it.

"Dr. McLaughlin's Electric Belt is the only thing that has ever helped me. I can now eat anything without the least ill effect and am stronger than I have been for years. I feel like a different man."

NEW VIEW.

A CROSS-EYED MAN'S SQUINT AT DOG SHOW.

What the Doggies Think of the Human Animal, and the Reflections of the Human Biped Upon Certain Canine Characteristics.

BY THE CROSS-EYED ONE.

ONE night last week I went to the dog show and found myself an object of pity.

The trouble with this business of being a wandering spectator is that you are always in bad.

You go to military functions and are patronized because you don't know know what they mean by "ballistics." You go to prize fights, and they think you are a miserable runt because you haven't a cauliflower ear. At baseball games you are humiliated to the earth because you don't know Christie Mathewson's batting average; you are patronized at art exhibitions and musical soirees, at horse shows and literary salons.

So I again hit the depths of human degradation by not knowing that a bulldog, to show "class," ought to have a rut carved in the middle of his forehead; a wasp waist and a lower jaw standing out like a porch; a countenance that looks as though it were made out of glue; then warped, and an absurd black wart for a nose.

Yet I am consoled because I dare say there are many not utterly unworthy people who do not know about bulldog pedigrees. At this very dog show, I saw a number of abashed lawyers and bankers and so on who might be able to hold up their heads in other circles.

THE DOG AND THE GIRL.

Generally speaking, a dog show is a collection of very large dogs attended by very fashionable young ladies with assisted coiffures; and very small toy dogs yearned over by thin young ladies and a mere skimpy bushel or so of hair padding.

Any real dog expert, I suppose, could readily explain why it is that the peaches always seem to own the bulldogs and the collies.

I imagine because the poor old bull is so appealing in his frightful ugliness and because a collie is so beautiful.

Champion Moston Monarch, the imported English bulldog who won the prize at this show, is, I dare say, the most hideous caricature that ever drew the breath of life. His ridiculous little rammed-in nose buried in a wrinkled contortion of flesh makes him look like a Tenderloin slugger with a harelip. Nature couldn't find a temper mean enough to fit that carcasse so she gave him the disposition of a saint. Also, I think, she made him a philosopher.

Marion Crawford, the novelist, once wrote of the psychology of the dog. He reminded his readers of those scarce moments when the sun is bright and warm and we have a few blissful seconds of drowsy consciousness without thought. It only lasts, he says, for the space of a breath, in humans—but with dogs it undoubtedly lasts for hours.

But you'll have to show me. I watched old Moston Monarch lying with his hideous, kind old face on his ridiculous crooked legs; I considered him and he considered me.

And he also considered the passing human world—false hair, padded shoulders, diamonds. I know he was thinking real thoughts.

WHAT ARE DOG'S THOUGHTS?

I wish I could know what he thought of us. I think I almost know.

I imagine his reflections were like this: "You needn't be afraid of me—you poor miserable weak things. I wouldn't bite you. I would be ashamed to.

"A dog biscuit? Why thank you; I don't mind. But it doesn't matter. I can fight for my dinner. You poor little faint-hearted things; you would starve. My ancestors served your ancestors when both knew what it meant to fear nothing. You will never know these days again, you have tasted fear—I never have. It's too bad you didn't breed yourselves as carefully as you did me.

"Once upon a time you tore your prey with your naked teeth like me and you killed with your naked hands. Now you stand off with some sort of popping engine and kill little birds. You suck cigarette smoke into your consumptive, aenemic lungs and your female kind, grown mangy and listless, have to pile false hair on their heads to cover the lack of the mane that was there when the world was honest and young."

All the bulldogs seem to look upon the world with this patient compassion. Perhaps this is why women like bulldogs so.

SERIOUS ST. BERNARDS.

St. Bernards, are, in a way, like that too. They always seem to be looking with piteous disappointment out upon the unworthy world of frivolity. Prince Yan, the winner of this show, was a magnificent lonely figure. He seemed to be saying: "You can chain my neck to this grating. It doesn't matter. There is that in my soul which you cannot chain."

Prince Yan seemed like some lonely old philosopher who has learned the mystery of life and of death and has found expressible sadness. There is something almost holy in the lonely, sad dignity of a St. Bernard. The tragedy of an erring, vicious world is written deep in those piteous eyes.

I don't see how anybody ever has the nerve to offer Prince Yan a dog biscuit.

The owners of great Danes stoutly insist that they are gentle, tractable and so on. At least I suppose they do.

To me, a great Dane is symbolic of war—not the war of range finders, fire control stations and a gun that looks like a steam boat engine and is fired by a problem in mathematics—but unholy, barbarous war where bare steel gluts through bleeding flesh—war of frenzied horses in thundering charges—war of the shriek of wounded and the yells of the battle-mad.

THE MISNAMED DANE.

In the first place, a Great Dane does not look like a Dane at all. He looks like a Siberian cossack. In his short clipped ears, his giant frame and his restless hard eyes, there is something that links him to the wild people of the Steppes. There is some strange suggestion of the outre, of some half mystical, oriental ferocity—the ferocity of the Tartar, half hidden and terrible.

I wonder if the Great Dane would show up as a fighter, as the Cossack did when the final test of courage came in the Jap-Russian War.

I shouldn't care for either the St. Bernard or the Dane for a dog friend. I couldn't stand the reproach of the former and the Dane is too menacing. I wouldn't like to have a dog that made one think of yelling Cossack cavalry charges.

I couldn't get up any interest in the bird dogs. They are gentle, fairly stupid dogs. They are only interesting as the annex of a hunting expedition. I would rather catch flies on a window pane than shoot birds—more excitement in it.

The fox hounds looked like the stage "props" of one Mrs. Humphrey Ward's society novels. They have an air of having been infected by superiority—like an English house servant. English fox hounds are liver and spotted; American fox hounds are black. This is because Mrs. Ward might want to write an American novel some day and it wouldn't do to have the "setting" the same.

THE FADS.

The inner circle, the upper stratum, the very doggissimus of dogdum seemed to be gathered around the kennels of the funny little Boston terriers. They seem to be the dog fad now.

A Boston bull is like Boston—he is like a bull dog seen through the small end of an opera glass. He is like Senator Lodge—highly cultivated but a little delicate. I don't know why they are the fashion.

The people gathered around the kennels are more interesting than the Boston bulls. They are the real dog "fans."

It is rather funny to see a man with a gray sweater and a golf cap sitting on the edge of a kennel innocently discussing the ancestry of a brindle Boston bull with a girl who has the loup of a dog whip about her wrist; or to see a gallant in the midst of a group of women, holding forth in the same old way by which Desdemona got hers, only telling of his exploits in breeding dogs instead of feats of arms on the battlefield.

FANS AND FANS.

The difference between these dog fans and other fans is not limited to the fact that it is co-sex. It is also variegated. There are all kinds of fans.

The Boston bull fans wouldn't look at a toy spaniel or a Dachshund—and I don't wonder.

There is an honest hideousness about a bulldog—but a Dachshund has something malicious and unwholesome about the look of him—like a black dwarf.

Billie Baxter said that a Dachshund happened by being born under a bureau. I don't know. It seems the result of an awful mistake of some kind. One hates to stand around and look at them. They may be sensitive about it. To me, they look like a woman laced too tightly in a directoire eel corset, and waving her ineffectual fat arms.

English toy spaniels are a foolishness. They look like a show girl surrounded by her rats and bundles of hair. A toy spaniel is a ridiculous muff with a black nose. A toy spaniel is a remnant of angora goat left over and, being too small for a goat, made into an absurd attempt at a dog.

I suppose it will convict me of being some kind of duffer; but of all the dogs, the Airedale terriers were the most fascinating to me. They are shaggy buff-colored fellows—like an Irish terrier only twice as large. There's an honest friendline.s in his eyes. He doesn't fight unless he has to; then he fights like an Irishman without counting odds and to the end. There's something square and honorable in the nature of such a dog. I imagine there are many things that a man would hate to do with him looking on.

WHAT'S DOING IN SAN FRANCISCO.

[SPECIAL CORRESPONDENCE OF THE TIMES.]

SAN FRANCISCO, May 21.—In the middle of Lyon street is a spring noted for its medicinal waters. It was famous in years gone by, but of late the drug stores have managed to minimize its reputation. If one drinks of it, good health and a large family will result. Hereafter by order of the Mayor and Board of Supervisors the spring will be preserved intact and the Million Club may have its hopes soon realized.

Dogs delight to bark and fight, for 'tis their nature to do so. No doubt this is true of the canines, and what is true of them is also true of their owners. The recent dog show caused a lot of barking and fighing not entirely confined to the kennels. A lady editor of a dog paper writes that a man editor of another dog paper won a prize for his purp by giving a wrong birth date, and the world of dogs is all at sixes and sevens.

The bankruptcy schedule filed by Willard P. Calkins, president of the lamented syndicate of that name, shows that the creditors were far more numerous than debtors. It also shows that the small matter of paying salaries was often neglected. It proves beyond a doubt that Calkins was a better financier than a banker who let him have $175,000 on a promise to pay.

Mrs. Evans, wife of an Ocean Park hotel man, after five years of wedded life, wishes to be free because she says her husband has been cruel to her. She has been rehearsing a play with Nat Goodwin and Edna Goodrich, and it may be that before long she may be rehearsing it with Nat only.

In this great land of ours, where freedom is enthroned and sometimes in limbo, it is refreshing to hear "Joe" Folk of Missouri show us a thing or two. In his lecture here he narrated how former Mayor Schmitz told him four years ago that he was going after whatever graft there was in San Francisco, and subsequent events proved that Eugene was a truthful man.

A wealthy young man tired of pink teas, made a wild dash for noveilty by enlisting in the army. He soon found that the monotony of drill and the early hour of arising had no thrills for him. Once convinced, he deserted in a private car, and now the newspapers are making so much fuss over this that he may be caught.

Ward heelers south of Market street read with interest in the newspapers that Roosevelt "Got the rhino," but they say that it does them no good, as he will not be here for a year and the "lection is only a few months off. It was no solace to them that the colonel expected to get an elephant and a zebra, as zoology without the coin.

Gaspar de Portola came into San Francisco on muleback, but his festival in October will come in on the warships of all nations. Our ambassadors extraordinary are abroad in the world and every nation with anything in the nature of a fighting ship will be asked to contribute to our gayety.

Mrs. Ann Graves attempted once to interfere in a family quarrel of Millionaire Frank Thompson and his wife, and she testifies that he chased her with a razor. Her testimony helped the wife to get an interlocutory decree of divorce and $150,000, as Thompson did not care to controvert the razor story.

They can say what they please about the climate of San Quentin being superior to ours, but Lawyer Collins, sentenced to fourteen years for perjury, prefers to stay right here amid the fog and the graft prosecution. He dares Sheriff Dolan to take him away, and he demands immediate trial on the charge of bigamy. He seems to think that fourteen years for just one little lie is a long time when other men get rich for telling many big lies.

It is pretty well settled that Seattle started the story that we were not going to entertain Japan's men of commerce, and for that reason they would not come here next September. President James McNab of the Chamber of Commerce says that Seattle is another and that our merchants intend to give the Japanese the time of their lives.

It may be good form to have wings hereafter, but Turfman Tom Williams objects to wearing them while in the flesh. He loaned a person named Perley a small matter of "fifty thou" to finance Alice Nielson and when he asked for it back the Perley person told him to go, for he was an angel. Williams is now suing for his money, which seems to have taken wings.

Certainly J. Oliver Stewart is entitled to the divorce from Eva Abba Stewart, who deserted him. Stewart avers that while he is rapid as a traveling man his wife is more rapid, inasmuch as she at the tender age of 23 developed a taste for fast life and ended by running away with another traveling man.

Pulling and hauling in the express business made $300 a month for J. J. Coughlin and his son. The latter pulled into the business first as an employé and then proceeded to haul his father out of it by offering him a weekly wage of $17.50, which offer the old man met with a suit in court to tone down the "dictatorial and arrogant manner" of the young man.

Judge Hunt, who has been on the bench thirty odd years, has refused to enjoin the Police Commissioners from trying "Jerry" Dinan for perjury. The judge is old enough to know that injunctions are not to be tried with in that way, and if his example is to be followed by other judges, what are poor citizens to do when grand juries charge them with crime?

PLUTO.

Mail Boxes on Trolley Cars.

The trolley car has been put to many uses in addition to that of carrying passengers, but it has remained for Grand Rapids, Mich., to find a new use for these vehicles, and this is the collection of mail. Mail boxes are affixed to the cars, and whenever a person wishes to have a letter reach the main postoffice in a hurry all that is necessary for him to do is to wait on a street corner until a trolley car happens to stop at that place. The letter deposited in the box is sent direct to the trolley terminal, where carriers are in waiting to convey the mail thus collected direct to the main postoffice.—[New Haven Palladium.

Couldn't Josh Him.

A young country chap once got a job in a city grocery. He was very cautious in his new berth—they had told him at home that the city people would try to josh him because he was green. He kept a sharp lookout accordingly for joshers.

A sober old maid entered the grocery one morning.

"I want some bird seed, please," she said.

The new clerk sneered and answered scornfully.

"No, ye don't, lady. Ye can't josh me. Birds grows from eggs, not seeds."—[Chicago Journal.

One Way He Could Help.

An eastern college graduate applied for work in a Michigan lumber camp. He was told to get busy on one end of a cross-saw, the other end being in charge of an old and experienced lumberman. At first all went well, but at the end of the second day the young man's strength began to wane. Suddenly the old man stopped the saw and spat.

"Sonny," he said, not unkindly, "I don't mind yer ridin" on this saw, but if it's jest the same to you I wish you'd keep yer feet off the ground."—[Everybody's Magazine.

Superstitions of Thibetans.

Two religious sects who hated one another, bitterly, were found by Sven Hedin in Thibet. Searching for the cause of this aversion he found that one of the sects believed that the prayer wheel should turn to the right, while the other was convinced that the wheel should turn to the left. In the region of the Brahmaputra he found a mountain which is so sacred that whoever walks around it thirteen times has all his sins forgiven. The result of this belief is that criminals from far and near infest this region. When Sven Hedin started to ride around this mountain on his horse the pilgrims informed him that that would do him no good.—[Exchange.

ILSON, THE "SILENT ADMIRAL," HONORED BY GREAT BRITAIN

[SPECIAL CORRESPONDENCE OF THE TIMES.]

ONDON, May 1.—Admiral Sir Arthur Knyvet Wilson, Grand Commander of the Bath, Grand Comder of the Victoria Order, and er of the Victoria Cross, who has been appointed a member of the mittee of Imperial Defense, would bably have gained fame as an intor, apart from his career in the ish navy, for several instruments estruction in connection with batships are the product of his brain. is also renowned among his fellow ers and men as being fonder of practice than preaching, and has eby gained the nickname of "the wn to the sailors of the English avy as "Tug," who has just been ppointed a member of the Comittee of Imperial Defense.

t admiral." He is 67 years of age possesses an iron will and a rough rior. He is extremely popular with t Tar, running Lord Charles Beresford close in their affections.

those who ought to know he is reted as the finest naval tactician strategist alive, though he himself would modestly award this palm he German Admiral von Koester, m he considers the greatest of livnaval commanders. It is within bounds of possibility, in these days wars and rumors of wars," that question may be put to the test that Wilson and Von Koester may one day find themselves pitted against each other.

Among his inventions, the one for which he is best known is the double-barreled torpedo tube. When some one else suggested the adoption of the steel net to protect ships from these terrible submarine weapons, he, in turn, went one better and invented automatic shears, which, attached to the nose of the torpedo, cut through this defense. Not content with this, he determined to outdo his own invention, and his uncuttable net was the result. He is responsible for several other inventions of this kind, torpedo warfare having always been his special study.

Officers who are placed under the immediate command of the "silent admiral" consider themselves in rare luck. He never irritates them with superfluous talk. During the maneuvers, some years ago, one of his cruisers was put out of action. The captain had done his level best, and Sir Arthur semaphored the simple words: "I regret to lose you from the command." As the overworked captain read these words, the tears came to his eyes, for that short sentence from Sir Arthur was worth yards of panegyrics from other commanders.

"Tug" Wilson, as the popular admiral is known among his friends, has seen a great deal of active service. He entered the navy in 1855, and served in both the Crimean and China wars. He was present at the bombardment of Alexandria in 1882 and fought at El Teb in 1884. He has acted as a Lord Commissioner and Comptroller of the Navy, commanded the channel squadron in 1901-3, and became admiral of the fleet in 1907. This last appointment was a signal honor bestowed upon him by King Edward, who, although the veteran admiral had reached the age limit of 65, exercised his royal prerogative and promoted him to that position, thus placing Sir Arthur's services at the disposal of his country for another five years.

It was during the battle of El Teb, while serving with the naval brigade, that he earned that most coveted little bit of bronze—the Victoria Cross. The battle had been in progress some time, and the British square—hitherto impregnable—was broken by the repeated mad rushes of the dervishes. Half a dozen Soudanese, seeing the gap, rushed in, and Capt. Wilson—as he was then—tackled them single-handed. His sword broke off at the hilt, but, nothing dismayed, he continued to lay about him with his strong fists, disabling several of them and giving the rallying troops time to close up once more.

The "silent admiral" has one weakness, if it may so be termed. He is passionately fond of flowers, and wherever he goes his steward has instructions to keep his cabin well filled with blooms, regardless of cost.

Regulating Auto Drivers.

OS ANGELES, May 21.—[To the itor of The Times:] For the last Sundays the pink sheet of The es has held more than usual in- st, by reason of the comprehensive sensibles articles on speed regula- of automobiles by Leon T. Shetit possible that California is really ng to begin at the enlightened stage the game, instead of passing through the intermediate stages to reach same conclusion as Connecticut ched last year? You say Connecti- is not satisfied, but let us discuss t point later.

he fact remains that the driver st be held wholly responsible for speed that he attains and any dam- that he may do. But there is a ollary to this proposition—what right s the Legislature to turn loose on highways a band of drivers who may be held responsible, but who really are not capable of managing a car, or, worse yet, are driving a car that is almost impossible to manage; I mean, has inadequate brakes or a steering wheel that must be twisted around about three times to avoid a small obstacle in the streets. Such cars are more of a menace at low speeds than the well designed and controlled cars at high speeds.

New Jersey and Connecticut claim, like many other States, to have certificates of a driver's ability—a mere farce to obtain more money from the motorist. One of such licenses I obtained on the top floor of an eight-story building; the other came 300 miles by mail; but both stated that I was an experienced driver, perfectly capable of handling an automobile. I believe in these licenses, but automobilists, why not demand our just rights?—make the State have examiners to judge these facts before turning loose a crowd of incompetent drivers to heap coals of fire on our heads. That is what is done in France, and though one hears tales of giving the examiner a tip and avoiding the trouble, even in that land of tips, I was personally given an examination that I am free to say taxed my best driving. It lasted for over an hour, running through crowded streets, stopping, backing, then out into the country driving at top speed, stopping with both brakes. Here I almost had trouble, for American manufacturers are inclined to use smaller brakes than the European cars, though rapidly improving at this date. So much for the driver. When the signature of the examiner was affixed to the card, with photograph attached, a copy was filed at the government office, and I was told to go and do as I pleased. I have often thought that if every driver was obliged to have such a license, with his photograph attached, so that it could not be transferred, it would be the ideal system.

Again, I believe that a man should be prosecuted for driving around with only one of his two brakes in working order, or his steering gear too slow for an emergency, far more than the man who breaks the speed limit and has both in proper working order. Why could not these same examiners, or others, have the power to make such examinations at any time, on street or in garage, as bank inspectors are allowed to examine at any time.

I spoke of Connecticut being highly dissatisfied with its present laws. Why? It is not the Connecticut people, but the motorist from New York, Massachusetts, and all bordering States who come there and are so pleased to get from under the shadow of speed traps, that they have utter disregard for the laws Connecticut has so long strived for. This, plus rough, winding roads, has made this ideal law appear to the public in an unfair light.

And now for one last point. In early history, the suburbs of London were unsafe, because of the bands of robbers; patrols were established, but still the robberies continued—more officers were used, but to no effect. Suddenly it occurred to some wise man to cut down the trees and underbrush, and thus take away the robber's hiding place. At once the robberies ceased. I believe that has been the reason why fatalities to pedestrians and other users of the highways in France have been fewer. They have removed the great sources of danger, namely, rough, crooked roads and blind side roads. The eye of the driver gets trained to look some hundred yards ahead, and he sees trouble in time to avoid it. Here, we glue our eyes to the ground immediately ahead of the car in order to avoid breaking our springs. We have to. We cannot look far ahead or watch for vehicles coming from side roads, or we shall be bumped to pieces. So when we put in those beautiful roads, let us see that they are laid in straight lines by surveyors, instead of where the whim of antidiluvian monsters wandered from grass patch to grass patch. Let us see that the roads shall be wide, so no man need be in the gutter; that undergrowth be far back so that we can see approaching children running suddenly out of their yards before it is too late to avoid them; and when we have made our road surfaces smooth, we can look to both sides of the road and far ahead. We are not afraid of our springs, and when we get the roads good, let us keep them good. It's far cheaper than building new ones.

I heard a Scotchman ask one of his brethren who had just returned from America about our roads. As a reply he received the following: "Roads, mon; why they be trails."

Now the East has the excuse of heavy frost for not preserving their roads; we haven't, and I feel sure that when we get a reputation for good roads and fair legislation, we will rival the Riviera as a Mecca for American motorists.

GEORGE H. TOWNSEND.

The Life of Big Guns.

Rear-Admiral N. E. Mason, chief of the naval bureau of ordnance, recently in testimony before the House Naval Committee gave some interesting information regarding the life of big guns. Two hundred rounds is estimated as the life of an 8-inch gun, and a 12-inch gun began to deteriorate after about eighty rounds, until the velocity was reduced a little and a broad band put on the projectiles, when the life of the gun was increased to 150 rounds. At the end of that time the wear from the excessive velocity and heat generated by the explosion of powder has amounted to so much that it is necessary to bore out the tube and reline the gun. The cost of this is about $12,000 on a 12-inch gun, which originally cost about $44,000. Some idea of the great heat to which a gun is subjected may be gotten from the statement of Admiral Mason that in battle he has seen a 5-inch gun fired until the paint burned off the outside. Last year about 1,200,000 pounds of smokeless powder was used in the navy in target practice and experiments.—[Washington Star.

Immigrants Making Good.

"All through New England Italians are taking up abandoned farms; not only redeeming land once under cultivation, but tackling portions of it which have always been considered impossible to work, removing rocks and other impediments, then planting in absolutely virgin soil. There never were such peach and apple crops in New England as are now being grown there by Italian farmers; while waiting for an orchard to mature, the space between the trees is devoted to vegetables—intensive farming. John Carini, at South Glastonbury, Ct., who went there as a day laborer sixteen years ago, marketed 20,000 bushels of peaches last season from his own orchards.—[New York Post.

Used Press Agent Methods.

"Yeas," related the old postmaster at Bacon Ridge, "times were getting rather dull around here, so we had to resort to some press agent tactics like you show fellows. The village editor put an ad in his paper that 'Hiram Brown would take city boarders at $5 a dozen.'"

"Great Bernhardt!" gasped the theatrical manager. "You don't mean to say that Hiram kept his word?"

"That's what he did, stranger, with reductions in large lots."

"But—but how could he board them at $5 a dozen?"

"He didn't board them, stranger; he just took them. You see, Hiram Brown is the village photographer."—[Chicago News.

Didn't Have a Cent, But—

A forlorn and tattered person came before acting Police Judge Edwards Saturday with much woe written on his face. He had been arrested several days before on an assault charge and was allowed until Saturday to pay his fine and costs amounting to about $10.

Being unable to express his state of woeful want with much freedom in the English tongue, he had arranged with an interpreter to write out what he had to say to the court. This missive he handed to Edwards. It read: "Dear judge, honorable sir—I am a poor man out of work; haven't got a cent in the world. Oh, can't you let me go?"

But the court held that the prisoner must either come across with a ten-spot or go to jail. This was explained to him.

That being the case, the woeful man took a well-filled wallet from his pocket, selected two worn fives and handed them over.—[Cleveland Plain Dealer.

Soporific Intellectuality.

In Philadelphia they tell a story of a man whose wife had arranged an "authors' evening," and persuaded her reluctant husband to remain at home and help her receive the fifty guests who were asked to participate in this intellectual feast. The first author was dull enough, but the second was worse. So, on pretense of letting in some cool air, the host escaped to the hall, where he found a servant comfortably asleep on the settee. "Wake up," sternly commanded the Philadelphian in the man's ear. "Wake up, I say. You must have been listening at the keyhole."

DRAMATIC NOTES.

Max Rogers will star next season in a new play by Aaron Hoffman, with music by Max Hoffman, entitled "The Young Turk." The scenes are laid in Constantinople, and the play will be under the management of Klaw and Erlanger.

Mary Garden has departed for a sojourn in Italy, where she will study. Previous to her return to America the singer will appear at the opera in Paris. Miss Garden expects to sing "Griselidis" at the Manhattan Opera-house next winter.

Laurence Irving and Mabel Hackney (Mrs. Irving) sailed for England late last week on the St. Louis. Mr. Irving expressed himself as highly pleased with the reception tendered the Incubus, and announced his intention of trying to produce the comedy again in the fall in New York for a run.

For Charles B. Dillingham, George Ade and Gustav Luders are at work on a new musical play in which Montgomery and Stone will appear. The production, which will be of the elaborate, will be made in October. "The Red Mill" will continue on tour. Elsie Janis will continue in "The Fair Coed" and Fritzi Scheff will remain on tour with "The Prima Donna." "The Candy Shop," after its summer run in New York, will go to the Studebaker Theater, Chicago. Mr. Dillingham has other plans for next season, not yet ready to be announced.

Now it is an Imperial choir that is to embody the latest development of Dr. Charles A. E. Harris's ambition. This Montreal musician, who, by his Empire Day concerts in London, "has of recent years been making music play an important part in strengthening the ties between England and the over-sea dominions," would organize a new corps of Empire singers in London. "My idea is that this Imperial Choir should be a special body, not to compete in the ordinary way with existing choirs," he tells the London Evening News. "I want a choir of 1000 voices, and I hope to get them during my present visit to London."

The Drama---Players, Playhouses, Theatrical Chit-Chat.

TOPICS OF THE STAGE.

By Julian Johnson.

What's the use of howling about the bad show?

The magazines of the past month have, with quite astonishing unity, endeavored to beat the naughty play to death. Yet the naughty play survives, and there is more than suspicion that the outcry acted as a fine fertilizer in the hotbed of salaciousness.

It is now a generally understood fact that you can't enumerate immoral details in the slightest, or even portray the items of crime, without tempting some curious idler to go and do likewise.

Yet the astonishing presentation of a careful resumé of indecent shows in one of the leading magazines last month contained not only the full particulars concerning the name and location of each, but a well-prepared index of each rounder-tempting item. Of course, the author of the article hammered his typewriter in entire good faith, and the editor of the journal publishing it acted likewise—yet, can you imagine anything more to the heart's desire of these managers than such notoriety? The truth is, that it probably gave substantial bolstering to a waning spring business.

There is really nothing to lament in the condition of the American drama. The American play is genuinely on the up-grade, not only in regard to morals, but as well where artful construction, humanity and dramatic timeliness are concerned.

Compare any one of the best works of the day with the play of even ten years ago. Don't you see a difference—and isn't the difference all to the better?

That there are plays and productions resting chiefly upon fleshly appeal is a fact, and there will, doubtless, be ever such works. A metropolitan audience is a queer composition, containing as it does a sprinkling from every people of the Aryan race, and in a great city the size of New York there will be whole audiences given over to the enjoyment—alleged, at least—of things done rare, for the sake of the rareness, or rawness, itself.

The better audience can't help those things, any more than the industrious, respectable average citizen can prevent certain other denizens of his town from using sharp and skin-flinty ways to get their money, selling short weight and transferring property in crooked deals. We have such among us. And, moreover, they are not few—yet we know that we are progressing, that we are in the main honest, and what is still more important, that each year finds us a little better than the year before.

Some managers, and some actors, will tell you that the money-making show is one of scanty costumes and jokes, which, if not exactly double-meaning, have at least a carmine touch. Yet to any one who is so much as a regular theater attendant, it is plain that the very reverse is true. The average American theater devotee wishes to go at least nine times out of every ten to a show which will edify or at least innocently amuse his wife, his mother, his sister—or somebody else's sister.

And don't forget that it is just this average theater-goer who makes the managerial, actorial and playwriting business profitable. The class which finds real amusement in a toothless, plotless and inane dramatic bore, like "The Girl From Rector's"—which has been the objective point of several of the chiefest magazine wails—is extremely small. Yokels from the Jersey back country, "come t'town t'have a time, b'gosh!" and a few languid fellows of the street who wot not what new sensation will be required to relieve their day-in-and-day-out monotony, make the real audiences of such a play as this until it is widely advertised by hands raised in holy horror. Then curiosity is stirred, and many other people go. The managers who produce shows of "The Girl From Rector's" class never make such pieces anything but dull stupidity. There are no exceptions, have been none—probably will be none. Morality out of the question entirely, these pieces always offend the educated eye and ear by their crassness, vulgarity and sordidness—absolute sordidness. Yet the men who make them know by experience that some sanctimonious one will soon shout "Murder!" at the offering, and that the first expression of this kind will start the whole train of shocks—and also the dammed-up flow of dollars.

I believe that no show of this kind has made much of a success without the coveted and utterly unpurchasable advertisements of the too-pious.

Plain, garish, unrelieved vulgarity seldom does much serious harm to anybody when presented in either art or literature. Humanity is so constituted that that which seems just beyond its reach, that thing above which is plainly written "Thou Shalt Not," is the only thing worth striving for.

One is reminded of the old German story about the man who became suddenly and intensely enamored of the beautiful girl he passed upon the street—so enamored that he turned and followed her, block after block. But when she stopped, turned quickly, and addressed him with unmistakable boldness—he fled, disgusted.

If there are really evil influences at work in our drama, we must look for them to make subtle appearance in some keenly intellectual piece which is attracting the serious attention of the progressive, educated theater-goer. One innuendo in a brilliant comedy is more evilly effective than a whole White Way full of flashy young women from the restaurant of the winged lion.

There is only one thing that will kill the cheap, blatant, grossly sexual burlesque of the type we have just discussed; that is the truth, written and spoken. Most of these producers got exactly what they deserved from the daily press of New York; few papers gave anything more than a plain, unvarnished account of their buffoon wit and leggish dullness. The manufacturers knew, however, that some artless high-brow at a magazine desk would soon fall upon them in infantile fury—and so it came to pass.

When this sort of inflammatory stump-speech alarm ceases, so will cease also the dull, lifeless, vulgar play. Having no more curiosity to feed upon, the bum play will starve to death.

The Grigolati flying ballet will come to the Orpheum this week.

This is one of the prize acts of the circuit, one that Bill Cline writes exclamation-point stuff about, while Manager Drown assumes the smiling, benevolent "see-what-you're-getting-for-your-money" expression.

There are seven girls in this ballet, and their performance is quite a la any other flying ballet, with the piano-wire supports worked from 'way upstairs. There is also a flying pigeon effect, and altogether the performance is said to be very pretty and unusually graceful. They have a lot of mechanism, most of which came in last week in boiler-iron cases. To prevent discovery of the "methods" of the act, at least two of the twenty men required to operate it are said to sleep in the flies, perpetually on guard.

Girl pupils of Cumnock School will present Henry Van Dyke's four-act drama, "The House of Rimmon," at Cumnock Hall on Thursday evening. All the parts will be taken by girls. The players include Misses Esther Allen, Ethel Bryan, Emily Standlee, Minerva Bussenius, Esther Cummings, Zella Wood, Gertrude Workman, Mary Stevens, Harriet Candee, Helen Bosbyshell, Ruth Martin, Eileen Kreimeier, Mabel Burtner, Florence Herndon, Mabel LaCroix, Marion Norris, Louise Draper, Mary Lemmon, Amy Poppe, Irene Ryan, Meri Miller, Lottie Lawrence, Ramona Harrod and Helen Mansfield.

People of the Week.

Howard Scott, who will be the first actor after Mansfield to play his famous role of Beau Brummell; Margo Duffett, who has a prominent part in the Burbank "Circus Girl" presentation; Floretta, premier aerialist of the Grigolati flying ballet, at the Orpheum; Vera McLean, a newcomer at the Grand; Percy Bronson, of the Kolb and Dill company; Mabel Albert, Walker Theater, and William Robyns, Los Angeles.

THE LOCAL WEEK.

The Belasco Theater company will this week give the first stock production anywhere of Clyde Fitch's "Beau Brummel," in which the late Richard Mansfield scored his first success, and, indeed, one which endured through his life.

Howard Scott will have the title role, and those who know Mr. Scott's convincing stage capabilities and pronounced personality look for a finished and distinguished portrait of the celebrated and exquisite beau.

The play will admit of elaborate costuming, and the managerial promises in this respect are good.

Following the "Beau Brummel" performance, the Belasco company will give the first stock performance anywhere of Eleanor Robson's play, "Merely Mary Ann." Miss Reed will play the Robson part.

The Murray and Mack company at the Grand Operahouse will this week make use of "Finnigan's Ball," which is their best-known piece, and which, in various revisions, they have played successfully for many years.

Unlike most of their offerings, this piece is said to possess a genuine plot, with many ingenious situations.

The musical numbers will all be new, and will include "Most Every Town has a Broadway," "You're Just the Boy For Me," "Always Leave Them Laughing When You Say Good-By," "Gooda-By, John," "A.B.C. of the U. S.A.," "I'm Glad I'm Married," "China Doll," "Killarney, and others.

Next week the Murray and Mack organization will enter upon a new line of plays—namely, the series of the Rogers brothers. The two chief comic roles, instead of being played in German dialect, will be turned to Irish to suit the necessities of these amusement purveyors.

The first to be given will be "The Rogers Brothers in Harvard," and it is said to offer wider scope for scenery, costuming and specialty than any Murray and Mack undertaking so far.

The Burbank players will continue in musical comedy for another week, "The Circus Girl" refusing to be shelved in favor of a return to straight drama. Next Sunday, however, the Burbankers will offer a revival of Ouida's romantic "Under Two Flags," which made Blanche Bates famous, and which has not been seen on a local stage for several seasons.

"The Circus Girl" has proved rather a remarkable success at the Burbank. While a certain lack of smoothness was noted in its earlier performances all this had disappeared before Wednesday night, and the production, from that time on, would have done credit to a company organized especially to present this piece. Much of the credit for this result belongs doubtless to Harry Girard, who directed the company in its preparation of the play; but more still attaches to members of the Burbank's acting force, who have done nothing in the part that has so completely proved their versatility.

Kolb and Dill will continue "Playing the Ponies," the second of their series of shows, at the Majestic Theater for another week, beginning with a performance tonight and including the regular Wednesday and Saturday matinées. Like their first offering, "The Politicians," "Playing the Ponies" has made a pronounced hit with Los Angeles playgoers, and for this reason an extension of a week has been deemed advisable. The Kolb and Dill engagement at this house is limited, however, and consequently "Playing the Ponies" will be withdrawn after next Saturday night to make way for "Weiner and Schnitzel," the third in the Kolb and Dill series.

"Playing the Ponies" is a musical comedy with a melodramatic plot, music-coated. It has been liberally supplied with catchy songs and its story is funny, both in its development and in its characterizations. Among the songs that have proved popular are the telephone number, sung by Misses Baker and Alzora, and Messrs. Kolb and Dill, with a chorus of telephone girls; "Summer Girls," by Mr. Chase and chorus; "Beautiful Eyes, Beautiful Lies," by Miss Olga Stech; "Easy Money," by Mr. Bronson, and "Something Seems to Say You Love Me," by Miss Rafter.

Grigolati's aerial ballet, one of the Orpheum circuit's feature performances, heads the bill at that vaudeville theater this week. There are seven girls "flying" from invisible piano wires, while fifty white doves, released from the gallery, fly down and perch upon them as they soar. Twenty men are required to manipulate the mechanical end of the act.

The sketch for the coming week is "Po White-trash Jinny," from the pen of Lillian Mortimer. It is said to be a realistic and powerful little melodrama of poorer people of the South.

The musical offering is by the four sisters Amatis, now on their second tour. They are Germans—Gisela, Kaethe, Bertha and Valeria. Their specialty is piano work, but Gisela has a voice of exceptional range.

Knight brothers and Marion Sawtelle sing and dance and put various sorts of fun into their turn. The holdovers are Paul Sandor's Cirque, Fred Ray's players in Roman burlesque, Hawthorne and Burt, and Arcadia.

At the Main-street Regal Theater Black and Grant, in a singing, talking and knockabout act, are heading the bill. Others on the bill are Eddie Ross, contortionist said to be out of the ordinary; Dorothy Walker, in whistling and illustrated songs; Ransom's orchestra in popular music, and new "first run" motion pictures.

The new director at the Unique Theater is Charles Justi, and he will present his first production, "The Man From the Moon," tomorrow night. The action takes place in the mythical kingdom of Sunwarnia, and a fantastic running plot of the usual extravaganza sort unwinds itself with interesting rapidity.

Annie Bauman will play Clytie, the subject whom the king willed to be queen; Stella Adamis will be Malinda, usurper to the throne; John Martin is a prophet and soothsayer; Mae Parker is Inkie, Melindra's Greek slave, while Will Armstrong will be seen as Pat Hannigan, a gay Irishlad, who makes those he meets believe he is a man from the moon.

Much new popular music will be introduced, and Irene Earle opens the show with illustrated songs. The newest motion pictures will be shown.

An entirely new bill will be presented upon the Empire stage this week, and in addition a new orchestra, which will be in regular attendance henceforth.

The programme includes the Orpheus Four, a black-face quartette of notable laugh-producing prowess; the Bernsteins, man and woman, in a specialty act; West and Mack, in black-face fame, are said to be among the best on this circuit. Al Frank will sing to the illustrated curtain while new motion pictures complete the bill.

The Walker Theater entertainment this week should appeal especially to lovers of good singing and dancing, pretty girls and comedy sketches. Manager Pieper has arranged a bill of much variety. The bill is headed by the farceurs, Elmer Ballard and Mat Albert, who have a brisk skit called "Dick's Return." The Grace sisters, Titian blondes, are real sisters and are said to have a real song and dance turn. Otto C. Rabe, musical Samite, has a novelty act full of originality and musical specialty. Virginia Reeves, operatic mezzo soprano, has a choice group of selections. Dick Parker, minstrel man, has a variety of new stuff. The two Heymans present songs and dances. Joseph Manley has a new illustrated song, and there are new motion and travel pictures.

The programme for the coming week at the Los Angeles Theater promises to be one of the best given there in many months. May Ward's "Dresden Doll" head the bill. This act is the largest on the Sullivan-Considine circuit, and enlists the services of nine pretty and agile young dancers.

George Wilson, the minstrel king, is also on the bill, and will revive memories of his illustrious days in real minstrelsy. V. L. Granville, London character actor, said to be very capable, has a sketch, "Twixt Dark and Daylight." Mr. and Mrs. William Robyns have a one-act emotional drama, "Counsel for the Defense," while Duff and Walsh will offer "Dancing Musicale."

Mme. Doherty's eighteen white poodles will continue to be amusements for the young, and new motion pictures will be shown.

The Mason Operahouse will be reopened Monday, May 31, by Ethel Barrymore, in "Lady Frederick." Her supporting company will include Bruce McRae, Jessie Millward and others.

Recent Sculptures by Alexander Stirling Calder.

The lower photograph is from a plaster sketch by Alexander Stirling Calder for the sculptural enrichment of the archways of the new Throop Institute, now being erected in Pasadena. The upper photograph shows the left spandrel, just completed, and was taken while the monumental sculpture was still in the clay in the artist's studio. This is undoubtedly the most important work in sculpture that has been done in Southern California, and ranks among the most notable things this fine artist has done.

MUSIC AND MUSICIANS.

By Julian Johnson.

Director H. P. Moore, who has been enduring the vicissitudes that usually come to the director of an American city concert band for several years, and has endured them well, is to furnish the "official band" for the Elks' reunion in July. This big band will number eighty men and will be featured in concerts, on parade days and at the grand ball.

Mr. Moore's programmes at Eastlake during the past few seasons have been marked by much variety and fine arrangement of classical and popular numbers.

Pearl Helen Herndon of this city has just returned from the north, where she played a special engagement for the Orpheum circuit. Edgar Allan Woolf, New York sketch writer, is doing a one-act piece for Miss Herndon. She has an engagement in view at the Oakland House, but otherwise will not present her monologue, "Society Girls," which she presented through the Northwest. Miss Herndon will resume her vaudeville work the last of August.

The fourth and closing concert of the season by the Immanuel Presbyterian Church orchestra, of forty-five members, R. J. Nichols directing, will be given June 10 in Immanuel Church. Soloists will be Miss Lucy Fuhrer, 'cellist, and Harold Walberg, violinist.

Carl Lanzer, American violin maker and virtuoso, gave a private recital at the residence of Harry Withers, No. 2101 Fourth avenue, last evening. Mr. Lanzer presented a very varied programme, including classics and national folk songs, playing all without piano accompaniment.

The Vernon Bettin Concert Company, made up of Vernon Bettin, Miss Grace Whitesell, Edwin Ideler and John Bettin, will leave for a concert tour through the East tomorrow.

Vernon Bettin, the youngest of the troupe, is well known through Southern California as a boy soprano not only of unusual voice, but of remarkable artistic ability.

The DeLano Mandolin and Guitar Club, and the Lyra Mandolin Club, under Mr. DeLano's leadership, will appear jointly with the Temple Baptist chorus at a concert to be given at the Auditorium on Thursday evening.

Several novelties will be offered at the coming recitals of Mr. and Mrs. Thilo Becker. Among these are a sonata for violin and piano, by Caesar Franck, and a sonata by Brahms. These are listed as novelties because of their rare appearance on concert programmes. At the concert of Saturday afternoon, June 5, Oskar Seiling will assist Mr. and Mrs. Becker, playing with the latter the Bach concerto for two violins, which, as far as is known, has not been heretofore performed in Los Angeles.

Both Mr. and Mrs. Becker will be heard in a number of individual works.

Miss Maud Nicolaides of the Occidental School of Music, will give a recital at the school, No. 124 West Avenue Fifty-two, next Saturday afternoon. She will be assisted by Mrs. Edith Grant, soprano; Miss Lou Crinkian, soprano, and Miss Edith Palmer, accompanist.

Friday evening a gold medal piano recital, under the auspices of the Los Angeles Conservatory of Music and Arts, was given in Symphony Hall, Blanchard building. The participants were Ethel Ione Reaves, assisted by Mrs. A. E. Carter at the second piano, and Mrs. T. J. Seymans, reader.

Miss Mary E. Decker, also of this school, gave a violin recital, assisted by Earl B. Valentine, yesterday in Metropolitan Hall.

The orchestra of the First Methodist Episcopal Sunday-school, under the direction of Earl Bishop Valentine, will give a concert at the church on Tuesday evening.

An attractive programme is being arranged for the closing concert of the First Congregational Orchestra's fourteenth season. The number will include a new arrangement of Rubinstein's "Kamenoi Ostrow," a recent orchestration of Waldteufel's "Woodland Dreams," Guirlitt's "Marionetten" overture, and a "Lucia" selection. There will also be a sextette for strings, flute and piano, by Fauconier. The soloists will be Miss Jennie Jones, clarinet, and Mrs. Beatrice Hubbell Plummer, soprano.

GREAT SINGING BAND.

Thirteen Thousand Voices Will Be Heard at June Festival in Madison Square Garden.

The Executive Committee of the United Singers of New York, under whose auspices the twenty-second National Song and Music Festival of the Northeastern Federation of Singing Societies will be given in the Madison Square Garden, New York, on June 19, 20, 21 and 22, have completed their plans for the unusual event, which will bring together a total of over 12,000 singers, to be heard at different times during the week of the festival. The festival has been divided into seven monster concerts, says Musical America. Among the distinguished notables who have accepted invitations to be present are President Taft and Gov. Hughes.

The opening concert of the great festival will be held on Saturday evening, June 19, when a monster chorus of 7000 voices will sing the chorus parts in Max Bruch's "Fair Ellen," assisted by Mrs. Corinne Rider-Kelsey, soprano, and Claude Cunningham, baritone. The regular programme will be rendered under the direction of Julius Lorenz and Carl Hein.

Sunday afternoon, June 20, has been set aside by the committee for the school children's concert, which will be given under the direct supervision of the Board of Education. The children's chorus will consist of over 5000 voices, all of which have been selected from the different high schools and elementary schools of Manhattan Borough. The programme on this afternoon will be under the personal direction of Dr. Frank R. Rix and Albert S. Caswell, supervisors of music in the public schools, assisted by an orchestra of 100 musicians, under the direction of Felix Jaeger. On this afternoon Mrs. Corinne Rider-Kelsey and Daniel Beddoe will be heard.

On Sunday night, the 20th, Mme. Schumann-Heink will be the star feature of the concert, and on Monday afternoon, the 21st, will begin the competitive prize singing of the societies, comprising the second and third classes, which consist of societies having a membership limited to sixty; and also of the societies of the second class for the New York City prize, which was donated by the singing societies of New York City.

On Monday evening, President Taft will be present, and will deliver an address. The soloists on this evening to further add éclat will be Mme. Schumann-Heink and Daniel Beddoe and a monster chorus of 7000.

On Tuesday, the 22d, will begin the singing for the Kaiser prize, which is the feature of the festival. The prize was donated by Emperor William of Germany, who has personally selected two representatives to come to America to assist in adjudging the winner.

On Wednesday, the last day of the festival, the prizes will be awarded.

Miss Pearl Herndon,

Sonnet.

If, when the story of my love is told,
This book should live and lover's leisure feed,
Fair charactered, for bluest eyes to read,
And richly bound, for fairest hand to hold—
O limn me then this lovely head in gold,
And, limner, the soft lips and lashes heed,
And set her in the midst, my love indeed,
The sweet eyes tender, and the broad brow cold.
And never let thy colors think to cast
A brighter splendor on her beauties past,
Or venture to disguise a fancied flaw;
Let not thy painting falsify my rhyme,
But perfect keep the mould for after time,
And let the whole world see her as I saw.

Sculpture by Mr. Calder.

Undoubtedly the most important commission in sculpture that has been executed in Southern California is that which came to Alexander Stirling Calder a few months ago from Throop Institute in Pasadena, and which he has been quietly working on at his studio on Figueroa street, near Orange, ever since, and which will keep him busy for at least four months more.

This is nothing more nor less than a colossal sculptural enrichment of the archways of the central building of the new institute, whose various buildings are to be erected in the form of a quadrangle. The central or administration building, on the west elevation, is already indeed in process of erection, and on last Wednesday the huge clay model for the left spandrel of the three archways was lowered from its lofty position under the roof-tree of the sculptor's studio, to be cast in cement, which is more durable than marble, and has, moreover, a warmer and more agreeable tint.

In this noble trio of archways the sculptor has attempted to give plastic utterance to the aims and scope of the institute. The motives for his expression, conceived in a free treatment of Spanish Renaissance, have been evolved after a perusal of the President's inaugural address, and broadly cover the whole field of human effort and intelligence, under the heads: Nature, Art, Energy, Science, Imagination and Law.

Beginning with the spandrel on the left is Nature (the restorer,) in the guise of Pan piping his gentle joy of life. Flanking this is Art (the creator,) the poet inscribing his solution of the riddle of life. The left spandrel of the central group represents pure Energy (the overcomer,) exerting his strength, he knows not why. Then Science (the searcher,) gazing, and lighting his torch at the sun, which forms the central cartouch over the archway.

The spandrels over the right archway are winged Imagination (the inspirer,) exulting in yet unexplored possibilities; and Law (the preserver,) with watchful preparedness guarding the ancient tables of the law.

The pilaster decorations between the arches have as motives the sunflower (relating to nature;) a terminal bust of Minerva, protectress of the arts; a terminal bust of Mercury, presiding over science; and on the right the standard of Justice. Below the pilasters are: A stag's head under the sunflower pilaster; a composition of star and crescent under the science pilaster; and a mask below that of art. Below the fasces is an open book grasped in a hand.

The cartouch on the left has been made in the form of a lyre; that in the center, of the life-giving sun with a border of the signs of the zodiac; on the right, a plowshare. The frieze of the cornice has a continuous decoration whose motive is the ear, the eye and the mouth.

"The desire for outward manifestations in the arts of our cherished and hidden hopes," declared Mr. Calder, "is inherently and healthily human. The great expressions that this has had in the past have formed a happy middle ground between the slavish confinements of poverty and the riotous waste of wealth. For true art is not ostentatious. It is not for the merely wealthy, any more than it is for the very poor. It is sternly true—the fruit of our experiences in subject, and the accumulations of our longing for a fuller existence in expression. It is with this confident belief in the dignity and purpose of sculpture that I would protest against the tendency to regard such work as merely ornamental—not useful. It is most supremely useful, as the bread you eat—or else all the great art of the world has been in vain.

"But it has not been in vain. It has gladdened, inspired, expanded and enriched the world. Without it we could not now exist. Hopeless toilers in the endless, sodden maze of life—without one vision of the irrepressible optimism of art—humanity must have perished from the earth."

A careful study of the left spandrel—the one already finished—will convince every one, I think, that Alexander Stirling Calder is a sculptor who has at once great power and great imagination, that his fancy has depth as well as airy grace, and that his decorative sense moulds his lines and masses to forms that suggest the sonorous rhythm of an epic. If, now and again, he introduces a delicate lyric note for the sake of added beauty, it never obtrudes itself above the grand harmony of the whole.

"Not from a vain or shallow thought and never from fingers that are merely cunningly facile have come the sculptured figures, big and full, of an almost brooding significance, of the man whose work we are considering. He is too tremendously in earnest for careful prettiness, he has too much to say for dainty phrasing—and so (I say it in all seriousness) in this completed spandrel he delivers a message, through two sculptured figures which are only one-third larger than life, which has much of the grandeur and mystic meaning of Michael Angelo's. Pan piping for the dancing kid, the poet questioning the inscrutable Sphinx—but each must find the sculptor's meaning for himself; each must interpret according to his experience. Art, like nature, "speaks a various language." Your moods will tell you her meanings. But her best and truest utterances are for him who approaches her with the simple faith of a child.

When I asked Mr. Calder why all the figures above the arches were those of men, he replied that he had always associated intellectual force more with the male than the female. Too, the male figure seemed to him much more plastically expressive than the female. However, he had not meant to lay any particular emphasis on sex—he had only sought for the forms that best expressed his idea.

Friederang's Head of Christ.

Maximilian Franz Friederang, the only living "genuine antique fresco" painter, whose recent exhibition at his Madison avenue studio, New York, won the admiration of mural decorators, whose great wall in the Church of Our Lady of Lourdes, Brooklyn, covering an area of 6600 square feet, is the largest single painting in the world, whose frescoing of the Supreme Court robing room is one of the artistic sights of Washington, D. C., and who last year came west to execute the admirable series of panels that are now to be seen in the handsome and spacious dining-room of Gen. Harrison Gray Otis' Los Angeles home, "The Bivouac"—has finished, after many years of European study, an ideal head of Christ.

"In the Perfect Man," said Mr. Friederang, "are embodied all the noblest attributes—love, righteousness, sympathy, purity, humility, self-abnegation, patience in suffering, serene fortitude, intellectuality, sincerity—in brief, divinity expressed in human terms. This man, the epitome of God's creation, was the likeness of God Himself."

Mr. Friederang studied sixty different portraits of Christ in order to find his ideal in the composite he is now exhibiting. The principal representations of the Christ face the artist has pored over in his reconstruction are as follows in the order of their antiquity:

The Tiberius medallion profile, with the name of Jesus in Hebrew characters. Believed to be contemporaneous.

The St. Veronica relic (a veil or "napkin," supposed to retain miraculously the impress of the dead Savior's features) preserved in the Church of San Bartolomeo at Genoa.

The ancient fresco-painting, with more modern jeweled halo, surrounding the head, attributed to St. Luke, preserved in the Vatican Library.

The Vatican's antique Sacramental Patera, of green glass, from the catacombs. On this is etched the face of the Nazarene, with long hair parted in the middle, and short beard, quite different from the Roman and Greek fashion.

The full-face fresco from the Catacomb of St. Calixto. Its date is believed to be about 150 A.D. This is a picture of extraordinary interest and beauty, the type being similar to Raphael's in the Vatican "Transfiguration."

The face from the Cubiculum of St. Cecelia, Rome. Date, about 200 A.D.

The Byzantine mosaic from the catacombs of St. Sophia, Constantinople, 800 A.D.

Giotto, Florence, 1312.
Masavio (Tomaso Guido,) 1429.
Leonardo da Vinci, 1507.
Albrecht Durer, 1521.
Guido Reni, 1631.
Murillo, 1651.

Hoffmann, Morelli, Biermann and Gabriel Max, among modern religious painters, have also been drawn upon by the artist in his analytical study.

"In addition to its intrinsic appeal," says Henry Turrell in the World Magazine, "it may truthfully be said that the Friederang head synthesizes, with notable fidelity, the salient traits and features which the older pictures have in common, with a unanimity that is most convincing."

ART NOTES.

Theodore Wores, formerly of Los Angeles, and now one of the faculty of the Fine Arts Association, San Francisco, is in this city for a stay of two months. He will execute a number of portrait commissions here. Just before leaving San Francisco he finished a portrait of Miss Aileen Bauer, daughter of George W. Bauer. The portrait is a charming study in pink and blues.

Seven hundred people have already viewed the Strobridge collection of paintings and drawings now on exhibition at the Little Corner of Local Art. One of the water colors sent by C. F. Neilson from Munich has been sold to a Pasadena collector. Besides the pictures, there is also a collection of Navajo rugs made in Los Angeles by the Indian women at the Indian Craft Settlement near Eastlake Park. These rugs are for sale.

The Palette Club held its usual monthly meeting last Monday evening at the Los Angeles School of Art and Design. The subject for May, "Street Scenes," brought forth a number of good sketches from different members. There were papers and talks on art matters from Mr. Pattee, Mr. Ackerblum and Mr. Thompson.

One of Helma Heynsen Jahn's recent portraits, now to be seen at her studio in the Birkel building, is a charming pastel of a boy, Master Fishburn, only the head and shoulders being painted. The portrait, strong in characterization, will be reproduced in Art and Artists at a near date.

The interesting exhibition of California landscapes by Ernest Browning Smith, which has been held at the Blanchard gallery for the past two weeks, will remain open to the public for one week longer.

"Kayser"

Patent Finger-Tipped Silk Gloves

For 25 years, the Kaysers have been the utmost one could get in silk gloves. And they are today.

No woman who knows takes inferior gloves. But some women get gloves not half so good because they don't look in the hem.

The Only Desirable Gloves

Kaysers are the gloves with the patent tip—with the guarantee in every pair.

The Kayser pure silk fabric, made in our factory, is famous for its durable weave.

The Kayser fit and finish are due to infinite care—to fifty operations.

You want them, as all women want them, for they cost no more than the poorest gloves made. But you may get gloves which are vastly inferior unless you look for the name in the hem.

Short Silk Gloves, - 50c, 75c, $1.00, $1.25

This is the Event You've Been Waiting For. It Occurs Monday

Every woman in and near Los Angeles who needs or anticipates the need of a suit, a gown, a dress, a coat, a waist, or any outer wearing apparel, owes it to herself to be at the Unique tomorrow--Monday. According to our annual custom, we will place our entire stock of women's high class ready-to-wear garments on sale at unprecedented reductions.

Tomorrow Monday Morning

The Unique is an exclusive specialty garment house, catering to the highest class clientele in Los Angeles. It is, therefore, imperative that we close out every garment in its season, even though at a loss, rather than jeopardize the reputation of this house by carrying over garments from one season to another.

The Unique has the most expert and competent garment fitters in this city. Every garment must be fitted perfectly—no matter at what price it is sold.

The Unique's collection of garments is in a class entirely alone in Los Angeles. Every new style that is shown in New York is shown here. It is not fair either to you or to us, to judge these garments by the garments ordinarily found on sale. They are superior in quality--superior in tailoring--and entirely distinctive in character.

A "Unique" garment immediately stamps the wearer as a woman of refined and discriminating taste.

100 new garments -- opened only this past week--will be included in this sale. To get the broadest choosing you will need to be here early tomorrow morning. No goods will be charged or sent out on approval during this sale.

Surprising What Kodol Will Do

For you, when you need it. But the longer you neglect Indigestion the more you will suffer.

And, of course, indigestion if neglected long enough, brings on serious diseases in which Kodol cannot benefit you. Some of these there is no help for at all. There are, in fact, very few ailments which cannot be traced directly to impure blood. And impure blood is always due to a disordered stomach. Use Kodol and prevent Nervous Dyspepsia. Kodol will effectually assist Nature to secure a complete restoration of good digestion. It does this by at once digesting all food in the stomach and keeping it digested, until the stomach is rested and can resume its own work. Kodol removes the cause—and the effect quickly removes itself.

When it is recalled that Apoplexy, Heart Disease, Cancer—and even Consumption—are due to poor digestion and poisons thus transmitted to the blood, and throughout the system—the importance of maintaining good digestion is at once realized. We knew what Kodol would do before even the first bottle was sold. If we did not know just what it will do, we would not guarantee it the way we do. Every tablespoonful will digest 3¼ pounds of food.

Our Guarantee. Get a dollar bottle of Kodol. If you are not benefited—the druggist will at once return your money. Don't hesitate; any druggist will sell you Kodol on these terms. The dollar bottle contains 2½ times as much as the 50c bottle. Kodol is prepared in the laboratories of E. C. DeWitt & Co., Chicago.

POOR MEN IN U. S. SENATE.

Wesley L. Jones of Washington Held Up as an Example to Youth of America.

BY JAMES B. MORROW.

WASHINGTON (D. C.) May 17.—The right kind of a boy is always helped, of course, by a sensible and seasonable word of encouragement. He has a listening ear and a hungry heart to start with. As a rule, too, he is deplorably poor. The interview I purpose to write today, with the son of a farm laborer and a woman who had to work for their living, is intended especially for boys of that description.

There was James A. Tawney of Minnesota, who is the most influential man, in some respects, on the floor of the House of Representatives. He was a blacksmith and a machinist. At the age of 19, killing time at a cheap hotel while waiting for a promised place of employment, he idly picked up a little biography of Abraham Lincoln. He has even forgotten the name of the author, but the stimulating facts were all that was needed.

A willing clerk in a country store, Joseph G. Cannon heard two lawyers try an exciting lawsuit. "I said then," he has told me "that I would wear rags and go hungry to be like them." Only another illustration out of a living and achieving ten thousand.

AN INSPIRING EXAMPLE.

One of the new Senators, Wesley L. Jones, of the State of Washington—and he is the man I am to write about—is an inspiring example of what industry, integrity, courage and self-control will accomplish in America. Moreover, he has shown conclusively that the magic of money, much as it is loved or despised in this country, is not necessary to open the sacred door of the United States Senate.

Jones is a poor man. The Republican he beat at a primary election is the president of seven banks and was entrenched behind the friendships and other assets of a long career in public life and politics. Jones simply went among the people and talked. They knew him, and they voted for him.

Physically, Jones belongs to the McKinley and Bryan group of orators, lawyers and politicans. Toil, however, has dug lines in his attractive and interesting face, broadened the tips of his fingers, and muscularized his bony wrists. Intellectually and morally, he is Wesley L. Jones himself, having his own code of ethics, as well as his own peculiar methods.

Although a stumper of grace and power, he is not crazy to stand up and talk. "I can only remember," he said, "three set speeches during the whole of my ten years of service in the House of Representatives. Oratory in the State of Washington does not pay, either here or at home. The fallacy that it does pay costs Congress a good deal of time. Besides, a man should be careful not to become tedious and useless."

"You were born," I said, "three days after the death of your father, who was a private soldier in an Illinois regiment of infantry?"

FATHER A FARM LABORER.

"Yes; he was wounded at Fort Donelson, while fighting under Gen. Grant, and died a year and a half later, leaving me mother in poverty. Before enlisting in the army he had been a farm laborer. My mother worked by the day or week, and thus supported herself and her two children. When I was 7 years old she married again. My step-father was also a farm laborer, having employment in the vicinity of their home, near the village of Bethany, and renting a little land now and then from a neighbor. We were always poor, the want of everything but the necessities of life being the inevitable and seeming destiny of our class in every agricultural community."

"And at 10 years of age you were hired out to work for wages?"

"That is so," Senator Jones replied. "I went eighteen miles away and worked three months for a farmer, taking $30 home after corn husking and giving it to my mother. While nothing but a child in years, I ploughed, harrowed, cultivated corn, and cradled wheat, besides doing a thousand other tasks which kept me constantly at work from sunrise until after dark.

"For six years I lived in that way, going to the district school nearly every winter and doing the roughest kind of farm labor in the spring, fall and summer. My money, of course, was paid to my mother. Fortunately I rarely had a cent of my own to spend foolishly. One Fourth of July, while employed by a Mr. Bliss, I remained at the plow all day. Wagons went past the field, the heavy-footed horses kicking up the dust and the boys and girls of my acquaintance, dressed in their Sunday best, on their way to Bethany, where there was to be a grand celebration, including a speech by a local celebrity. But I was philosopher enough to know that I was poor, and that the dime I might be tempted to spend was sorely needed at home.

REGRETS COME TOO LATE.

"Years after that particular Fourth of July, when, as a member of Congress, I had stopped at Bethany to visit relatives and friends, Mr. Bliss called to see me.

"'I have always remembered the day you plowed,' he said, 'and have been troubled to think that I was to blame, perhaps, because you stayed at home and didn't go to town. It has been on my mind for a long time, and if I was to blame, I want you to forgive me.'

"All of which shows," Senator Jones added, "that Mr. Bliss was a mighty good man. I was glad to assure him that I plowed from choice, but I skipped some of the reasons and circumstances.

"One winter Mack Allen Montgomery kept a select school in Bethany. He was an educated man, and had visited and traveled in Europe. I speak of him particularly because I owe him my rescue from the sodden and hopeless conditions of my early life. He became a lawyer in time and the United States Attorney for the Northern District of Mississippi. He was also a national figure in the work of the Cumberland Presbyterian church.

"I was a student at his little academy, as it was called, walking back and forth from my home in the country. He, I am rejoiced to say, became greatly interested in my work and welfare. When he went to Enfield and opened the Southern Illinois College he sent me word that he would wait for his tuition if I cared to enter his staggering little school. I had just money enough to carry me to Enfield. Mr. Montgomery took me to a farmer by the name of Miller, who previously said he would wait for my board. So at the age of 16 I left home, not to return again except as a visitor.

SETS OUT FOR CHICAGO.

"At the end of the school year I paid my debts with money earned in the harvest fields. I remained with Mr. Montgomery until I was 22 years old, and had finished my college course, working my way by teaching school and working at all kinds of farm labor.

"How I got the notion of being a lawyer, I can't explain definitely. At least, where the idea doubtless originated, I borrowed some books of a lawyer. Having been duly graduated from the Southern Illinois College, the doors of which have long been closed, I set out for Chicago with the intention of getting employment in a law office. Never having been in a city, I was green as grass. There were 400 people in Bethany, I guess, and perhaps as many at Enfield.

GETS JOB ON A FARM.

"I stayed at a cheap hotel that night and walked out into the country next morning. Very little of my money was left. Still, I was so utterly unsophisticated that I didn't realize that my situation was rather serious. People who live from hand to mouth are not easily scared, anyway. I met a man in the road. He pointed to a big barn, saying: 'They want a hand over there, but I wouldn't take the job because they asked me to milk a lot of cows night and morning.' The barn and the large farm which surrounded it belonged to 'Long John' Wentworth, a famous Chicago politician. I was tall and slim, and the foreman thought I wasn't strong enough for the work.

"'But it will not cost you anything to try me and see for yourself,' I urged.

"No settled bargain was made. 'We pay all the way from $12 to $22 a month,' the foreman said. I stayed two months and received $44, which was considerably more than I had ever been given for similar labor. Soon after entering the law school, in September, I arranged with a firm of lawyers to sweep and dust their offices for the privilege of using their books and of sleeping on the floor at night. I got my meals at cheap restaurants—very cheap restaurants—and I didn't invariably eat three times a day, at that.

"In January my funds gave out and I had to quit the law school. I was pinched on every side. Furthermore, my clothes were getting threadbare. Still, my bed on the office floor was costing me nothing, and, in fact, I thought I was very fortunate. In the meantime I was studying law every minute, and studying it understandingly, and with great energy. I was much worried, however, when I thought I should have no capital when admitted to the bar and ready for practice. Some books would be necessary, and I should be compelled to have a table and at least two chairs. One day I heard that teachers were needed in the night schools. I passed the examination, taught twenty-one weeks, and was paid $210. In a little while I went before the Appellate Court, lived through the inquisition, and was duly licensed to begin business as a lawyer."

OPENS A LAW OFFICE.

"And then what happened?" I inquired.

"I returned to Bethany and visited my mother. My cash in hand now amounted to $150—plenty, I felt certain, to establish myself in a permanent and lucrative practice. I wanted to go somewhere else, but my friends persuaded me to settle in Decatur, a few miles north of my home, and in the very next county. I was young, inexperienced, and strange, and my $150 didn't last very long, notwithstanding my economy. But I didn't get into debt. Word came one morning that Mr. Montgomery had left the college at Enfield, and that I could have his place. I forthwith closed my brief and financially disastrous experience at Decatur. When I reached Enfield I was penniless. The school was run down and had lost in reputation, as well as in students. I worked like a horse for two years, and a personal inventory would have shown that I had no more than when I began, except a wife and baby."

"And you had accepted the hazards of matrimony regardless of your unprosperous circumstances?" I said.

"Well, you see, we had talked the matter over," Senator Jones answered, "and had found, theoretically, of course, that two of us could live together on the sum I was paying for my laundry, lodgings, and board. And our figures were about right. Indeed, I wouldn't care to say how cheaply a man and his wife can get along when they have no money to spend. We were married and we were poor for a long time, and we are poor now, for the matter of all that, but I have publicly said that whatever success I have achieved is more largely due to my wife's intelligent, loyal help and cheerful self-denial than to anything I have done myself."

MOVES TO THE COAST.

"Why did you remove to North Yakima, in the Territory of Washington?"

"I wanted to practice my profession, and Washington seemed to offer advantages to a young lawyer without means. Mrs. Jones and the baby were left in Illinois, because I didn't have funds enough to take them along. I traveled to Spokane in an immigrant car. A friend there advised me to settle at North Yakima, a town of about 1000 inhabitants, in the central part of the Territory. I arrived at the place which has since been my home on April 2, 1889. I didn't know a soul, either in the town or the adjacent country, and all the money I had was $4.

"But," I asked, "did you find employment as soon as you got to North Yakima?"

"Oh, yes," Senator Jones answered, putting away his speaking voice and omitting his gestures. "A real estate company paid me $50 a month. I sent for Mrs. Jones and we went to housekeeping in a two-room shack. In fourteen months two lawyers and myself formed a partnership and bought a set of abstract books on credit. My first fee amounted to $5 and was paid in a replevin case in which I performed before a justice of the peace. One of my partners was elected prosecuting attorney, and that helped us considerably. However, the abstracts we made of real estate kept us alive and more or less cheerful. Our business grew and I made a respectable living, doing a general country practice in a region of farms and orchards. In time I bought some land and now I grow apples, pears, and alfalfa.

"In 1896 the Republican party in Washington went to pieces over the free silver question. Francis W. Cushman, now known as one of the great orators and wits of Congress, a lawyer in Tacoma who had been a section hand on a railway in Iowa and a cowboy and school teacher in Wyoming, and myself stumped the State for McKinley and the Republican platform. Washington gave Bryan a plurality of 13,000. Nearly every one believed in 1896 that the Republicans would be soundly beaten. Washington then had two members of the national House of Representatives and they were elected at large and not from districts. Cushman and I, being the only candidates before the convention, we were nominated by acclamation. Our defeat was openly predicted, even by Republicans.

HUSTLED AND WON.

"I made my campaign on borrowed money, getting $750 at a bank on my personal note without security. Cushman stumped one side of Washington and I stumped the other.

"'When a man gets ready to campaign in my State,' Cushman once said, 'he simply puts on a clean pair of socks, sticks a tooth brush in his pocket, and starts.'

"That is about the fashion in which we electioneered in 1898, 'going on the train,' again quoting Cushman, 'by wagon, on a bicycle, in a rowboat, or on a mule—only so we got there.' To the surprise of the public, we were elected. I was reelected four times, and Cushman, still in Congress, is serving his sixth consecutive term. On my way to the city of Washington I stopped at Bethany. I hadn't seen my mother or my old friends for ten years."

"What kind of a campaign did you make for Senator?"

"I traveled the State and addressed the people, but I spent no money—I had none to spend, as a matter of fact. My opponent, Mr. Ankeney, then in the Senate, is a very wealthy man. Under our primary law, the Republicans are permitted to indicate whom they want for United States Senator. My majority was about 19,000."

"What have you learned by your experience in politics?" I asked.

"That the man who keeps his word under all circumstances and tries to be fair to every individual and to every interest is not required to use money when he is running for public office."

BITS OF VERSE.

Song.

Shall I love you like the wind, love,
That is so fierce and strong,
That sweeps all barriers from its path
And recks not right or wrong?
The passion of the wind, love,
Can never last for long.

Shall I love you like the fire, love,
With furious heat and noise,
To awaken in you all love's fears
And little of love's joys?
The passion of the fire, love,
Whate'er it finds destroys.

I will love you like the stars, love,
Set in the heavenly blue,
That only shine the brighter
After weeping tears of dew—
Above the wind and flame, love,
They love the ages through.

And when this life is o'er, love,
With all its joys and jars,
We'll leave behind the wind and fire
To wage their boistrous wars—
Then we shall only be, love,
The nearer to the stars!

—[Rossiter W. Raymond.

Sunshine Song.

In a world where sorrow ever will be known,
Where are found the needy and the sad and lone,
How much joy and comfort you can all bestow,
If you scatter sunshine everywhere you go.

Slightest actions often meet the sorest needs,
For the world wants daily little kindly deeds;
O, what care and sorrow you may help to remove
With your song and courage, sympathy and love.

When the days are gloomy, sing some happy song,
Meet the world's repining with a courage strong;
Go with faith undaunted through the ills of life,
Scatter smiles and sunshine o'er its toil and strife.

—[Lanta Wilson Smith in St. Paul Pioneer Press.

Only a Word.

Only a word, yet how it brightened
The gloom of the darkening day,
Only a word, and lightly spoken,
And the speaker went his way.
Yet it took from a heart with sorrow laden
The weight of its pressing care;
It opened a rift for the blue of heaven,
And a gleam of the sunshine fair.
Only a word, and lightly spoken,
And the speaker went his way,
But the peace of the heavenly benediction
Followed him that day.

Kindly Eyes.

If you look on the world with kindly eyes
You will see nothing in it to despise,
In all that hitherto seemed low and mean
You will see virtues heretofore unseen
And all the beauties of the world will grow
More beautiful than those you used to know.
The faults of others you can then condone,
Because they are so like unto your own,
For others' actions you excuse can find
As if they were your own you had in mind.
No harsh misjudgment will you then express,
Thus advertising your own littleness;
No hasty criticism will you make,
Which, though half-founded, might cause hearts to ache.
But, loving all your world and by your world
Beloved, forgiving and forgiven, furled
Safe in dear hearts—all that will be your prize
If you look on the world with kindly eyes.

Renewal.

The sea is a moletn pearl,
And the pearl the fleckless sky,
The firstling leaves unfurl,
And the air is a fragrant sigh.

A bird's soft madrigal
In the pear tree's blossoming;
High on the church spire tall
A white dove preens her wing.

The elemental strife
Lost in a peace profound,
In sound of quickening life
That yet is scarcely sound.

One with a starry chime
Earth keeps her rhythmic beat—
Our mother, old as time,
With heart still young and sweet.

A TIP.

GUIDE TO STORK.

Tom Masson Gives Advice to Those About to Be Born—Advantages of Starting in Life in the Right Place and the Right Way.

NEW YORK, May 17.—This is an advertisement. Its object is to hold up the merits of this thriving town to those about to be born.

Don't be fooled by the rival claims of other villages. Read our list of advantages, given herewith, and be convinced. Other, and much inferior, places want you, but remember that you have only one chance to make good. You can't begin all over again. Don't let the other folks get your time. The country, bucolic and commonplace, with vulgar vegetation, is calling you. Do you want to get up at 4 o'clock in the morning and rake the meadow supposed to be so sweet with hay, when in reality it is filled with pains in the back and premature old age? Do you want to be born into a town where the prairie grass is so thick on the main street that when you take your daily stroll with the Mayor's only daughter you will have to have a patent adjustable little giant lawn mower attached to your feet in order to get down to the depo in time to meet the afternoon accommodation train from Kansas City?

No, sir! You are a self-respecting and ambitious baby. You have something to you. You have refined feelings and political instincts and a capacity for the right kind of long suffering. This is the place for you.

Let me put you on the right track. I should hate to see one so young and inexperienced as you are go wrong at so early an age.

And permit me to call your attention to one thing, as a proof of what I am telling you. Those who are here stick. They float around the horizon at times, but they always come back to Little Old New York. They are like the man who had a faithful pigeon that never failed him. And one day a friend made a bet with him that he could take that pigeon off to Philadelphia and it wouldn't be back home inside of twenty-four hours. The man took him up, and bet him a hundred dollars. The next day he met another friend and told him about it.

"And what do you suppose," he said, "the fellow did who made the bet with me? I'll be hanged if he didn't take my pigeon down to Philadelphia and clip his wings."

"Then you lost the bet," said the friend.

"No, sir!" replied the man, proudly, "I won. My pigeon came back all right—but he had awful sore feet."

THE MORAL.

Now, my dear little baby friends of the future, that's the way with us New Yorkers. We always come back, somehow or other.

We warn you to take no other cure for life but ours. This is the only genuine place where you can be ruined and rise again the next morning with a reputation larger than ever. A life of contiuuous excitement absolutely guaranteed, and all modern improvements. Even our jail is now fitted up with a bath tub and real water.

In almost any other place in the country you won't cut your nervous system until you are of age. Here it begins to show immediately.

Babies about to be born, attention! It is an awful thing to be born wrong. Think of waking up some morning in East St. Louis or on the outskirts of Newark, N. J., with a dull, hopeless sense that you had made the mistake of your life; that nothing can be done about it; that all is over.

As you loll luxuriously on the back of some sober old stork, waiting for your turn to come on in that great circus parade called life, be sure that your performance is going to take place in the right ring.

New York has so many advantages over other places that we almost hate to take your money. It is like stealing candy from you.

How will you know? you ask.

Easy.

Just tell the old bird to make his course for the Flatiron building. If he comes from the North, tell him to follow the line of politicians touring down from Albany. If he comes from the East, tell him to keep his weather eye open for the Statue of Liberty, but in passing over, let him avoid the customhouse, as it's against their rules to take vagrants like yourself, without a cent in their bluejeans, and no prospects. If he comes from the South, he can follow the tariff wall until it ends in Wall street, and if he comes from the West, and flies over Lincoln, Neb., all he has to do is to ask Bill Bryan, and he will tell him the way to the enemy's country.

The next question you may settle is just what part of New York you are going to be born in. But this doesn't really make much difference. It's all good. You can't make a mistake, wherever you are. You can reach the Stock Exchange, the race track or the baseball field and the Tenderloin for 5 cents from any part of the city.

The only thing that might happen to you is to be born into the family of a millionaire. But don't be anxious. You are safe. The chances are that you wouldn't get within automobile-running-over-distance of any one worth over ten thousand a year.

They don't want you. They have troubles of their own.

Now, my dear little friends, as you have been wandering around in the milky way, putting up at one place and another, spending your winters in Sagittarius and your summers in the Little Dipper, where the bathing is fine, you may have seen the circulars they have issued beforehand—telling you all about the fine view and the good air and the absence from mosquitoes, and the good company, and when you have put up at the place, you'd be kept awake all night by meteors, be so far away from any solar system that you couldn't see to read the scenery ads., and be bored to death by after-dinner speakers. And you have finally gotten so that you wouldn't believe all you read.

BEYOND THE LIE.

But we beg to assure you we are not that way. We have lived in New York all our lives, and we know how to be truthful. Yes, we do. We don't have to lie. We've gotten beyond that long ago. We are cosmopolitan.

Other cities are proud of their graft. They point to it with pride as being the proof of their advanced civilization. But we don't even have to point to it any more than an inhabitant of Switzerland has to call attention to the Alps.

And so, young sir or madam, as the case may be, you must naturally believe me when I tell you that New York is the greatest place on earth, and for those who have ambition, a fairly good constitution, and a wish to benefit themselves, I desire to call attention to the following special features:

Let me request you, in your mind, to leave your aimless old stork for a while, and step aboard our sightseeing coach, never losing sight of the fact that you are about to visit the most civilized spot on earth, and one which the wisdom and genius of mankind have specially prepared for the education of the young; toward which happy object nothing really pertinent has been omitted.

I would also call your kind attention to the fact that New York does not differ from any other place in the United States, except in degree. They are all built on the same plan. Our well-known modesty prevents us from emphasizing this point too strongly. We may only say that, as long as you are going to do a thing, you might as well do it right. Instead of wandering around from one place to another, getting your character formed, your morals on a firm and paying basis and your clothes so they will fit, you might as well have it all done up in one package for you.

And so now I take my megaphone in hand to drop you a few picturesue truths, and we are off!

SO WE GO.

This little island, my young friends, as you will doubtless observe, is shaped like a loaf of French bread, cut in two lengthwise, and acts as a vermiform appendix to the State of New York. On the lower part of the loaf of bread are stuck some matches, in clusters, representing office buildings. The center has a rectangular patch of Paris green, called Central Park, where, when you finally make your real entry, you can come and sit on the gravel walk some day, and watch the grass being kept off it. Along the left side of the loaf and in the center you will notice that the crust is still on. This is called the upper crust, and is used by Pittsburgh millionaires to slide on, when they are not attending services in the Standard Oil building. Through the middle of the l...f, from end to end, are holes made by the subway worm. This little animal is very industrious. He has even bored under the water that lies on each side of our loaf. Some day there will not be anything left to New York, but the hole he has made, and then, full of lasting honor and accumulated dividends, he will pass away to immortality.

We are now passing the Customhouse. This is the place where Uncle Sam receives all his visitors. With genial smile and cordial handshake, he receives them all pleasantly, kicking them downstairs so gently that they hardly know it, stripping them of their clothes in his courteous offhand manner, searching them like a loving mother, and never using his sand-bag except in cases of emergency.

Here, on your right, is Wall street, famous for its moral influence over the youth of the entire country. It is here, my young friends, that you will receive, when you are a little older, the best part of your education. Notice the little lambs playing around. Now, some people have said a cruel thing—that these little lambs are fleeced here, and shorn, just when the icy winds are beginning to blow over the lea, and they need their covering most. Nothing could be more untrue; for the truth is that the little lambs come here themselves, voluntarily, from all over the country, just to have a good time, and help out the government. If it weren't for the little lambs there would be no Wall street, and if there were no Wall street no one's character could be developed, for there would be no place to go where you could get rid of your money fast enough, and so please don't forget:

That every little lamb you meet
It is your pleasant task to greet,
And don't bestow on him the while
A sad commiserating smile.
And (though inclined) I beg you'll cease
To comment on his lack of fleece,
For you should really understand
He is the mainstay of the land.
And though he may seem somewhat thin
And over osseous in shin,
Pray don't forget that in his play
He really likes to be that way.

We are coming now to the slums, and as this is the place where you will doubtless make your entry I call your particular attention to its diverse advantages.

My dear little friends, the master minds of the age—diplomatists and statesmen, financiers, and, in fact, all of the nation's highbrows—from time immemorial have contributed their share toward perfecting this locality for the very young. You see they have done this with a set purpose. Being intelligent men, and deeply concerned for the future of their race, they have realized that only in the right kind of slums can the best citizens be raised. They tried to make a success out of the experiment in such places as Newport, but they always ran out of material, and so this region that now rises before us is the educational stamping ground of the future. You will notice that it is full of very young children, many of them only slightly older than yourselves, and that they are all, with one accord, leading the simple life. Some time ago it was determined by the best people that the simple life was the only one to lead, and these little ones are, therefore, following out in thir lives the highest thought of the day. Please to observe the number of games they are playing, the most advanced psychology having shown that it is only by games the youthful mind can be properly developed. Here, for example, is the pocket-picking game, which trains all of the senses in the most complete and up-to-date manner; and here is the bottle game, in which a transparent fluid termed gin is made to disappear before your eyes; and here is the black hand game, where the team work is so fine that even an extraordinary detective gets thrown down every time. You will, I am sure, notice also what an example of thrift our government displays by replacing with cobblestones the grass that used to grow in this district. You see, with so many young children, the grass would soon wear out, whereas a genuine set of cobblestones, such as any upright and honest city contractor is sure to lay, will last for a long time. These little ones, you will remark in passing, do not have to bathe. In this respect their faces do not resemble the bright and shining ones of the Wall street brokers whom we just passed a while ago. But that is only because there is not so much water here as there is down there. And, besides, many great scientists do not believe in taking too many baths. It is far better to make mud pies, eat sparingly and sit on cobblestones as these little ones are doing, than to lead a nutritive existence, where every one would be so effective there would be nothing to look forward to.

BROADWAY TO CALIFORNY.

Leaving reluctantly this pleasant place we pass on to Broadway, the street that begins at the Battery, leads straight over the Rocky Mountains and ends at the Golden Gate. Broadway is divided into the downtown district and the Great White Way, in both of which places the business of the country is done. But more business is done on the Great White Way than in the downtown district, because there are so many more varieties of ways where you can invest your capital.

The Tenderloin lies to the left as we go along. This is the district where the aesthetic impulses of the race are developed, the national instinct for beauty satisfied and the internal revenue tax on wild oats is collected. It is very accessible, being reached by fast trains from either Yale or Princeton in about two hours and fifteen minutes.

We now come to the West Side, where the best bridge players live, and the female members of the family migrate north in summer and south in winter.

The chances of the stork leaving any of you here are very slim, but in case he does, please remember that if you apply yourself in your youth and keep sober, you may in time rise to be a member of all the leading clubs in town. Just ahead is Harlem, the flat-dwellers' paradise, while beyond lies the great West, an unknown region where occasionally some New Yorker more venturesome than the rest penetrates and comes back with stirring tales of buffalo and Indians.

Thus you will see that New York, the metropolis of the country, or, as it has often been referred to, the Kansas City of the East, is the only place for an aspiring baby to be born in. Don't let them put you off at Russia or Turkey. Come straight through and land where a country teeming with liberty, fraternity, equality and tall, stately, bleached blondes waits you with feverish anxiety; come to a spot prepared for you by patriotic sons of finance. Be a little careful when you land, or you may be run over by a motor car or clubbed to death by a policeman, but come. You may have to live on chalk and water for a while, until you can get credit in some well established poolroom; you may have to go around with only one shirt to your back, learn to rob others until you get enough money to be respectable, and sleep on a springless fire-escape, but still come; come while civilization calls, and Gotham holds out to you its unsterilized, peroxide, garlic-laden and gregarious welcome.

Mule That Won't Die.

Dan Hannon has a live mule with a broken neck. Previous to Tuesday morning the mule was a sound and vigorous animal. Yesterday while hauling cement from the Burlington tracks near Twelfth and N streets the driver went too near a steep bank and the team, wagon and all went over and rolled to the bottom. When the driver got to the wagon after the accident the mule's head was faced the other way on his neck. The mule, however, was much alive and got on its feet. The men freed the team from the wagon and led the mule with the wry head to the Holmes Adkins barn, where the veterinary surgeon pronounced positively that the animal's neck was broken. It is not known whether anything can be done to put the head on straight again. The mule is still alive and shows no paralytic symptom.—[Omaha Bee.

Education in Turkey.

New light that is being thrown on things Turkish has brought out some interesting discoveries. For example, the Turkish woman of the upper classes is described as perhaps the most highly educated woman in the world. While her western sisters are busy playing hockey and tennis, performing their social duties—and flirting—the Turkish woman spends her day in reading and study. It is not an uncommon thing to meet Turkish ladies who can speak not only half the languages of Europe, but know, in addition, ancient Greek, Persian and Arabic. Schopenhauer and Herbert Spencer are favorite authors, and the latest English and French novels are the principal subjects of their afternoon small talk. The picture of this strenuous intellectualism contrasts oddly with the traditional ideas of harem life.

Bitterness of Quinine.

An old negro man was riding on the train and fell asleep with mouth wide open. A mischievous drummer came along, and, having a convenient capsule of quinine in his pocket, he uncorked it and sifted it well onto the old negro's palate and the root of his tongue. The old darky, awakening, became much disturbed. He called for the conductor and asked: "Boss, is dere a doctor on dis here train?" "I don't know," said the conductor. "Are you sick?" "Yas, sah, I sho' is sick. I sho' is sick." "What is the matter with you?" "I dunno, sir, but it tastes like I busted my gall."—[Exchange.

Two Banking Centers.

As New York is the banking and speculative center of the United States, so is London the world's mart and exchange. New York is the banking metropolis of the largest and richest free-trade area in the world. She takes toll from forty-five States. But their dealings and hers with the outside world are so hampered and embarrassed by the tariff, which is almost as fatal to banking as to shipping, that for these outside operations she has to depend mainly upon London. London, on the other hand, is the banking metropolis first of England, in the second degree of the British empire, and, thirdly, of the four continents. The Bank of England is not only the British bankers' bank, but the foreign bankers' bank.—[London Economist.

In the island of Jamaica there grows a tree with the botanic name of Daphne Largetto, from the branches of which native wokmen make peculiarly strong and excellent whips. These whips have the handle and lash all in one piece. The handle consists of a part of the stem retaining the bark. For the dash the stem is deprived of bark and then split into strips, which are woven together in a flexible cord six or seven feet long. The proper taper is afforded by detaching more and more of the strips as the end of the lash is approached.

FRESH LITERATURE—Reviews of the Latest Books.

NEW BOOKS REVIEWED.

(BY A TIMES REVIEWER.)

A Chat and a Book.

FRENCH NOVELISTS OF TODAY. By Winifred Stephens. John Lane Company, New York. (Price $2.50 net.)

Mlle. Nepveu, with all the classic and proletarian knowledge of contemporary literature, once said to me, with a shrug of finality: "There are no great French novelists living today. The great French writers are all dead—alas! . . . Why? . . . Ah, France is getting too socialistic. Democracy—ooph!—that kills art. Art and Democracy are antitheses. The modern Frenchman can do nothing: even his appreciations are decadent—plebiscites! Watch them in the galleries, monsieur; you cannot get near a Bouguereau or a Lefevre if you wanted to. Democracy has taught artificiality. We have gotten to the point where we admire the paud and tinsel. . . . Where are the giants of yesterday—Balzac, Maupassant, Molière, Flaubert? Our novelists write as Brenguin paints—au premier coup, c'est-a-dire—la poët. We are democratic moderns. The color has gone from our life, and our literature is faded and washed out. . . ."

We were standing in the Panthéon. She pointed to a group of Puvis de Chavannes (one of the chapters in the wonderful story of Geneviève,) "How many artists come here for inspiration? In the quartier they all try to paint like Bouguereau."

"You have Anatole France and Barrès."

"True. But what have they done? Since realism dwindled away, French literature has been metamorphosing. Heaven only knows what will be the result when the transition is over. Anatole France and Barrès are pillars of a bridge. They have not given us any great characters like Turgenieff and Balzac. Find in France and Barrès, if you can a Philippe Bridau, a Mme. de Rochefide."

"The moderns don't delight in villains." I found myself unconsciously defending the moderns. "Their literary stomachs digest only the more palatable figures."

"Eh bien! Find a Eugénie Grandet, a Mme. de Monstauf, or a César Birattean. Philippe Bridau's brother Joseph is surely a remarkably fine example of predigested purity."

"Loti paints well."

"Peutetre. Read Loti after a morning of Flaubert. His colors (no matter how artistically arranged) give the impression of being viewed through a dirty window pane. . . . His characters? Oh, well, one gets tired of his fishermen just as one gets weary of Bazin's peasants. Where do we find today a Ursule Mirouet, a Tacheron, a Blondet, a D'Arthez? Where is a post in modern French literature like Lucien de Rubempré? Where is an equal for le père Goriot. Even Bazin does not give us anything as fine as the blind old Mme. Zehirine, with her ruddy hands and her nervous knitting needles; and he specialized on such subjects."

"Anatole France has given us some great vivid characters, and so has Barrès. What we lack is the proper perspective."

"Ooph!" All the contempt and enmity of the "veterans" for the new generation (the enmity of Halvard Solness for Ragnar Brovik) is in Mlle. Nepveu's nature. Renan had it. "Sylvestre Bonnard, Thais, Jacques, Tournebroche—are they as vivid as . . ."

"Abbé Guitrel," I broke in, "is lifelike, to say the least."

"Yes, but no more so than Bazin's Canon le Suet. Another thing; Anatole France is not a builder, as was Balzac or Maupassant or even Chateaubriand. He pretends to philosophise, and moves on a pivot. He plans elaborately, and when he is not loose, he is ambiguous. Have you ever read Lazare?"

I admitted I hadn't. She dropped the subject of Lazare, and I wondered if she had been using any of his phrases which she thought I might recognize.

"'Balthasar,' 'Thais,' and 'Sylvestre Bonnard,'" she went on, "are unquestionably the finest things he has ever written. Compare them, however, with 'Le Pere Goriot,' 'Salammbo,' 'The Nobleman's Nest,' 'Splendeurs et Misères des Courtesanes.' What is the result? Turgenieff outstrips 'Sylvestre Bonnard' in intellectual fibre, and his temperament has a feminine culture that Anatole France does not possess. Can you not feel the demerits of 'Thais' set off strongly against the white light of Balzac. For opulence and imagery, for phantasy and imaginative intensity, does not 'Salammbo' excel 'Balthasar?'"

"Since you judge everything by the Balzacian criterion, allow me to ask if you can deny that France and Barrès and Prevost often fill their pages with conversation more natural and clever than the author of 'Eugénie Grandet.'"

"Conversation has become a passion with the modern novelists. They cultivate dialogue to the exclusion of everything else. It is the inevitable tendency toward the dramatic form of literature. As a general thing, an author who is a brilliant talker is not a brilliant student. Charles de Barnard, who was but a pupil of Balzac, was a much finer conversationalist than his teacher. But is 'Gerfaut' to be compared with 'La Recherche de l'Absolu' or 'Un Menage de Garcon?' The times 'Gerfaut' approximates the most closely to Balzac are when the influence of Balzac is the most pronounced."

"Bourget and Edouard Rod are examples of sensuous and cultured moderns. The fact that Bourget was a déraciné, aided, by its doctrinal influence, to lift him above his sociological contemporary. N'est-ce-pas?"

Mlle. Nepveu looked at me from her integument of disdain. "Psychological novels are ladies' novels. Psychology is too abstruse to masquerade as art. Look at your own failures—Henry James and George Meredith. Again, Bourget was Teutonic: he is simply a soured Maupassant. . . . You spoke of Edouard Rod: He is the French George Eliot. Furthermore Rod is a poseur. He looks at things through a pessimistic veil. 'Death,' he might have said, 'is the only excuse or compensation for existence.' He is the fictional interpretation of Schopenhauer—un chercheur désinteressé."

"Can you say he is not a lover—a fine, magnificent lover?" Mlle. Nepveu is not an adherent of that paradoxical school of "Art for Moral's Sake." She is primarily a French educator. She knows that morals and philosophy cannot be taught by art; that art teaches but one thing—esthetic beauty. I often wonder how she holds her position as president of the French Board of Education now that the Frenchman is growing a conscience.

Charles-Louis Naundorf
From The King who Never Reigned"

Portrait of Anatole France from French Novelists of Today"

A group of Bisharin. from "Cairo to the Cataract"

"Yes, he is a lover, but O! what a lover! He is not like Gautier. . . . He has such an abominable conscience."

Here we branched off into the discussion of abstract esthetics. We had started out originally to dissect educational systems in the United States. She, at the time, was investigating our collegiate curricula, for ideas. (I have recently heard that she has tried our methods on the French universities and failed.) Our conversation left colleges and rested for a time on pragmatism. William James had enthralled her. Then, by natural transition from pragmatism to conduct, to self-expression, to art; we came to the French novel. I recall this part of our conversation because there are few students in France, whose opinion is as sincere as hers. I have often suspected her of writing the anonymous "Cradle of the Rose." M. Nepveu, her brother, is a delightful ironist, and has written more than one novel of unusual and charming cynicism.

My main object in relating this chat with Mlle. Nepveu is to offset what to me is a needlessly eulogistic attitude taken in a recent book called "French Novelists of Today." The book, nevertheless, is a very excellent and searching bundle of criticisms. It is exceedingly feminine, and, while it loses the brusqueness and insistence of Huneker's masculinity, it loses, also, Huneker's uncompromising disapproval of things. No book I have seen covers the ground so thoroughly and presents so adequate a conception of modern French novel writing. The task is more difficult today than it was when the direct influence of Ramonticism or Realism molded French fiction to its caste; for, as Sabatier says, France is now essentially transitional and is journeying toward a new ideal, mysteriously and sadly, making many experiments and many mistakes as she goes.

Winifred Stephens has chosen as representative the following contemporary writers, and to each has devoted a chapter: Anatole France, Marcel Prevost, Pierre de Coulevain, Paul Bourget, Maurice Barres, Rene Bazin, Edouard Rod, and Pierre Loti. I have little fault to find with her work except, as I have said, with what seems to me to be an overvaluation of these writers. She dwells longer on the good qualities than on the bad—a thing more to be regretted in regard to finished writers (not one was born later than 1862) than an overinsistence on the demerits. I cannot help feeling that the unconventional opinions of Mlle. Nepveu were more nearly correct than the impersonal and optimistic criticisms of Winifred Stephens. But Miss (or is it Mrs.?) Stephens quotes copiously from the writers whose work she treats, and a brief resumé of the principal novels assists greatly in our appreciation and understanding of contemporary writers of France.

Two Good Travel Books.

A SUMMER IN TOURAINE. By Frederic Lees. A. C. McClurg & Co., Chicago. (Price $3.75.)

FROM CAIRO TO THE CATARACT. By Blanche M. Carson. L. C. Page & Co., Boston.

The travel books have started out rather early this year, and (strange to say) rather well. The average travel book (and you no doubt know it) is a fearsome and unique affair. I realize that travel books are not, as a rule, intended to be read; that they are designed as gifts for people with whose taste you are not familiar. (Their insipidity, as a rule, defies discussion, and no embarrassment ensues when you meet and chat with the recipient; as is often the case when the gift has been a novel.) The travel book (alluringly bound, and bulging with half-tones of house fronts, church steeples, and stiff interiors,) is merely a harmless and amiable means of discharging an obligation.

But (as I have intimated) there have come to me two very different and very interesting books of travel; one on Egypt, and one on France. Both show much study and preparation, and neither is superficial in treatment or research. They happily possess the qualities which go to make a travel book interesting, and have in a large degree caught the spirit of the countries they deal with.

Frederick Lees's book (which for the most part is a record of a sojourn among the chateaux of the Loire) is a little the better of the two. It is blessed with a maturity of diction and idea not found in "From Cairo to the Cataract," which, though brisk and pleasing in style, is not seldom tentative and addicted to the use of metaphors that have been made respectable by ages of honorable employment.

No part of Central France is as rich in historic romance and natural beauty as the section about the banks of the Loire, Vienne and Cher. When Mr. Lees wanders through this country he sees not only the external beauty, but the vision of the whole Renaissance. The memories of the famous Margaret of Angouleme and of Clement Marot give Mr. Lees material for many interesting pages. We are led through the scenes of "La Comedie Humaine" at Tours. (Balzac once said of Touraine that as soon as the English began to appreciate its beauty, they descended upon her like a cloud of grasshoppers.) Undoubtedly, Mr. Lees is not a fleeting tourist of France. Only a long residence in a place could so imbue him with its spirit. The photographs are very good, and supplement well the text, although the lady-like water colors (of which there are twelve) do not belong outside a middle-class drawing-room.

Blanche M. Carson, on the other hand, is the objective tourist. She sailed three weeks up the Nile, read much history en route (which we get in entertaining condensation) and described the passing pageant. She took a very genuine delight in what she saw, and much of her spontaneous joy got into her pages. The illustrations are unusually interesting, but the book has a disagreeable odor of soap.

Mothered by "Three Weeks."

SPIRITISM. By Ivan Trepoff. Donald W. Newton Company, New York. (Price $1.50.)

The author of this book spends 288 pages trying to be pornographic, and succeeds only in being silly. He (it sounds like a "she") has here and there a feeling for good work; some of the descriptions are fine journalese. Please don't read it.

The Dauphin, Louis XVII.

THE KING WHO NEVER REIGNED. Being memoirs upon Louis XVII by Eckard and Naundorff, with a preface by Jules Lemaitre of the Academie Francaise, together with introduction and notes by Maurice Vitrac and Arnould Galopin, to which is added Joseph Turquan's "New Light Upon the Fate of Louis XVII." The John McBride Company, New York. (Price $3.50 net.)

There are few historical mysteries as interesting as the fate of the unhappy Dauphin Louis XVII. It is a phase of history which for many years has attracted the attention of scholars. Eckard's "Memoirs" upon the captivity and death of Louis XVII have largely been the basis for their speculations, and Eckard has been copiously quoted in all these ulterior researches. Eckard's work was painstaking and conscientious. He did not confine himself to documents, but interviewed many of the survivors of the revolutionary epoch. There were others, though (notably De Beauchesne, Chantelauze and La Sicotiere,) who threw much light on the mystery surrounding the death of Louis XVII.

The first division of this new book of Messrs. Maurice Vitrac and Arnould Galopin is devoted to the account of the Dauphin's brief and troubled existence by Eckard. The original "Memoirs" of this Royalist have been completed and rounded with the work and research of other historians. We get here a very poignant recital of Eckard's own sufferings and imprisonment in the Temple.

As opposed to these "memoirs" of Eckard, there are those historians who hold the theory that Naundorff and the Dauphin were the same person. (It will be remembered that in the beginning of the nineteenth century Charles Louis Naundorff claimed to be the Dauphin, rescued by unknown partisans of the royal cause; and tried to force the Duchesse d'Angouleme to recognize him as her brother, and, therefore, the rightful heir to the throne of France.)

The second part of the volume is devoted to the "Recollections" of the Pretender Naundorff, which are a history of himself from 1795 to 1810, when he appeared in Berlin. We have a grotesque narration of his peregrinations, maladies and imprisonment in mysterious and unknown places. Naundorff was only one of twenty-five who claimed to be the Dauphin.

The third section of the book is entitled "New Light Upon the Fate of Louis XVII: The Drama in the Temple." It is by M. Joseph Turquan (who, I believe, is considered the greatest living French historian.) M. Turquan, after a careful examination of all the evidence, comes to the conclusion that the Dauphin died in the Temple January 19, 1794 (which was nearly five months before his death was officially announced,) and that he was buried in the moat of the Temple and not in the cemetery of Sainte-Marguerite, as Eckard claimed in his "Memoirs."

The Empty Glory of Mrs. Mighels.

THE FULL GLORY OF DIANTHA. By Mrs. Phillip Verrill Mighels. Forbes & Co., Chicago. (Price $1.50.)

I have read but two novels this year that could not haye been improved by cutting. Those two novels were "Dragon's Blood" and "The Power of a Lie." There are indeed few writers today capable of writing 90,000 words at a sustained temperature. The average writer cannot conceive 90,000 words in their entirety with all the intricacies of structure and homogeneous developments which they should embody. Only sporadically will the imagination burn to the white heat which gives us inspirational writing; most of the time is spent pottering along getting ready to say something.

This is exactly what Mrs. Philip Verrill Mighels has done. She has spent 432 pages (to say nothing of a weird, esoteric introduction about "Hadama" and "Hayva") getting ready to say something. And the book is finished without that something ever having been said. Mrs. Mighels is wordy—aye, wordy. I realize that this simple statement does not differentiate her from the vast majority of writers of her sex. But let me assure you that Mrs. Mighels is quite unique in this particular.

Most of the book, "The Full Glory of Diantha" (the title presages prolixity,) is about nothing at all. In between these desert and waste places, there is a slight, gushy story of no interest to any one save the author. This story, foolish and inconsequent as it is, is told with incredible verbosity. A foolish stenographer in New York wants an elemental cave man for a husband. The junior partner of the firm where she works loves her. She tells him her ideals, and he sends her West to find the primeval gentleman, betting her $1000 (the cad!) that she will return to him. She goes West, finds a dominating boor named Caspar, imagines she is in love with him and sends him to New York to get his real measure. Caspar fails to make good, and the heroine marries the junior partner.

As I have said, the story is, for the most part, padding. Good padding is bearable (vide Dickens, Balzac and Sand,) but Mrs. Mighels's stuffing is ungrammatical and comatose. It is really unfortunate that such an utterly unenlightened book could get into print. My only reason for giving it this space (which it deserves not at all,) is because it has a very giddy cover in orange and blue, which might allure an unsuspecting victim into a purchase. Again, the book is dedicated to that very excellent and lovable poet, Rennell Rodd.

(oPor Rennell Rodd!)

Elaborated Manner Guide.

KINGSMEAD. By Bettina von Hutten. Dodd, Mead & Co., New York. (Price $1.50.)

There is not the slightest excuse for this book to have been written. Nor have I ever found in any of this writer's work a reason for its existence. No matter how interesting the things she might have to say, her style would strangle all the pleasure out of them. Her aim is cleverness, and she succeeds about as well as M. C. Chatfield-Taylor. "Kingsmead" is a kind of fictional "Book on English Etiquette." It is not as interesting as a book on etiquette, however; being too long drawn out and inferior to the literary quality of such manuals.

A Book of Many Prices.

THE GIRL AND THE BILL. By Bannister Merwin. Dodd, Mead & Co., New York. (Price, whatever the bookseller can get between $1.20 and $1.50.)

Mr. Merwin has mixed together in this thrilling tale all the ingredients necessary for two hours of excitement. The stuff in it is so cleverly handled that any one seeking an interesting story of mystery need look no farther. (This last remark of mine is very original, I assure you.) The book contains hold-ups, jiu-jitsu encounters, spiritualistic meetings, "those papers," wrecks, automobiles, burglars, thugs, motor boats and cryptic hieroglyphics. The plot involves the prime ministers of America, Germany and Japan in terrible international complications. Once the hero and the heroine get shut up in an air-tight refrigerator. It is a good example of what we charitably call "light" fiction.

I must say a word about the delicious ingenuousness of the publishers concerning the price of the book. On the front of the cover we read: "For information regarding the price see rear of cover." We capsize the book and are informed: "The published price of this book is $1.50. The lowest price at which it may be retailed is fixed by the publishers at $1.20 net, and it is sold to the trade on the condition that it is not to be retailed at less than this. It is not intended that this book should not be sold for more than $1.20 in localities where the cost of long-distance transportation necessitates a higher selling price." In other words, the book-seller is allowed to get out of you all he can for the book, and after you buy it the publishers inform you that if you have paid more than $1.20 for it you have been gotten the best of for just so much. How is that for naivette?

In Mozambique.

SALVATOR. By Percival Gibbon. Doubleday, Page & Co., New York. (Price $1.50.)

Of the younger British writers, Percival Gibbon ranks among the first. A colorful artist, he combines with rare precision an opulent style with interesting psychology of plot. Action, adventure, strange, living characters; powerful, subtle dialogue; human analysis—(all set against a vibrant background of tropical splendors)—these are the things that make Mr. Gibbon's story a striking piece of fiction. In a short story published years ago in McClure's (the best short story in any American magazine that year, by the way,) Mr. Gibbon proclaimed himself a fiction artist of high rank. The story was called "The Second Class Passenger."

Enervated Thrills.

THE OTHER SIDE OF THE DOOR. By Lucia Chamberlain. Bobbs-Merrill Company, Indianapolis. (Price $1.50.)

A gushy, gory, ghoulish tale of San Francisco in the '60's. It is full of all the impossible and exciting situations known to melodrama. In A. K. Greene's hands it might have been interesting, but Lucia Chamberlain knows as little about telling a story as it is possible for a writer to know. Despite all the shooting and gambling and murder trials and terrors and midnights, the tale is very lamblike. Here is the opening scene: A girl of excellent family, of delicate nurture, as she passes along a deserted street early one morning, hears a pistol shot. The door of a gambling house flies open and a murdered man falls out backward. Over him leaps another man, with a wild look that "fills the street with terror." The story is nothing if not exciting—and is not exciting.

Rhetorical Flower Garden.

THE CHANGING VALUES OF ENGLISH SPEECH. By Raicy Husted Bell. Hinds, Noble & Eldredge, New York. (Price $1.25.)

Raicy Husted Bell once wrote a book called "The Worth of Words." It was (unconsciously) one of the few joyful events of the year. Dr. Bell now writes a book on "The Changing Values of English Speech," and it runs a close second to his former one. No southern orator could ever boast of the flowery rhetoric which blossoms from the pages. The subject matter has been culled (I infer) from the programmes of a Middle West "literary society." The finishing touch of unconscious gayety is to be found on page 282. List and laugh: "Instead of cluttering these pages with notes and references, which few read, I will give a list of authors and books consulted, and in some cases quoted from, during the preparation, for the convenience of those who may wish to pursue the subject matter: Borenus, Calmet, J. Cheke, Legonidec, E. W. Chubb, Freret, J. Wright, L. R. Peet, Ormin, R. J. Ingersoll and Darwin."

LITERARY CHIT-CHAT.

Preëminent among men who have had scant justice done them by posterity stands Samuel Pepys. Because Pepys, in his delightful candor, revealed all the smallnesses and vanities of his nature, we generally think of him as a scandal-loving, frivolous Paul Pry, all eyes and ears and of no importance to any one outside of his diary. How far this falls short of the actual facts may be gathered from E. Hallam Moorhouse's "Samuel Pepys, Administrator, Observer, Gossip," the first complete biography of Pepys ever published (E. P. Dutton & Co., New York.) Readers who are still doubtful about the pronunciation of his name will welcome this stanza, published in the London Graphic in 1891:

"There are people, I'm told—some say there are heaps—
Who talk of the talkative Samuel as 'Peppice;'
And some—a precise and pedantic set their step is—
Who call the delightful old diarist Peppice;'
But those I think right (and I follow their steps!)
Always mention the garrulous gossip as 'Peps.'"

The truth that is stranger than fiction comes home in a letter relating to "The Planter," which Herman Whittaker has just sent to his publishers, the Harpers. "David Mann," he writes, "is dead—shot through the heart by his manadador. I mean Roland Pollard, the New Hampshire lad whose efforts to do the right thing by his enganchars inspired the character of David. I have only just heard of it through his mother. Let me tell you, too, that by a strange coincidence the lovely Mexican girl who gave me the idea of David's love, Consuela, died coming into New York harbor the other day on her first visit with her American husband. I confess that these happenings have had a peculiar effect on me. Though both the boy and the girl were merely the genus of the characters as they are in the book, I feel that both David and Consuela are dead."

"Uncle Joe" Cannon himself will discuss in the June Century "The Position of the Speaker—Is He an Autocrat or a Servant?" Mr. Cannon holds that "the Speaker is the servant of the House," and his reasons for his stand form a part of the article.

Sir Oliver Lodge, F.R.S., author of "The Substance of Faith," and other works of scientific import, will furnish the fourth volume in "Harper's Library of Living Thought," in which the three initial volumes were by Swinburne, Tolstoi and Flinders Petrie. Sir Oliver's work, to appear shortly, will be entitled "The Ether of Space."

Frederick Kinkade, author of "My Lady's Fortune Hunt," a story of the western gold camps, has many reminiscences, more painful than pleasant, of old Geronimo, the noted Apache chief, who died recently at Fort Sill, Okla. Mr. Kinkade went to New Mexico when a young man, just out of college, and during his six years' residence there the country was in a constant state of terror from raids of the murderous Apaches. The Indians were tireless foes, able to endure incredible fatigue, with little or nothing to eat. Hundreds of men, women and children met death in ambush, or endured unspeakable tortures. Geronimo and his entire band finally surrendered to Gen. Miles, and have been captives ever since.

G. W. Dillingham Company announce for immediate issue "The Merry Widow," founded on Franz Lehar's opera; "By Right of Conquest," by Arthur Hornblow; "Ridgway of Montana," by William MacLeod Raine; "The Battle," by Cleveland Moffett; "Redcloud of the Lakes," by Frederick R. Burton; "A Quarter to Four," by William Wallace Cook, and a new detective story, "The Solitary Farm," by Fergus Hume.

An arrangement has just been completed between the trustees of the University of Pennsylvania and the publishing house of D. Appleton & Co., by which the latter are to become the selling agents for the publications of the university. The publications include a considerable number of monographs, embodying the results of original investigation in the several fields of literature, science and philology, and will make an important addition to the Appleton list. The books are to bear the imprint of D. Appleton & Co., and are to be sold more extensively through the trade than has been heretofore attempted. The arrangement does not begin until the fall of this year.

"Short Stories" is shortly to begin some new features. One of these will be a serial supplement. Sixteen pages are to be added permanently to the magazine to make room for this. Monthly prizes in cash will be awarded for the cleverest, most original description or analysis of the next instalment of the serial.

Richard Harding Davis has written a new novel, "The White Mice," which will be published early in the month. It is a story of love and a revolution in a Central American republic, and written with the same dash and swing that made "Soldiers of Fortune" and "Captain Macklin" such good stories of adventure.

Francis Thompson's remarkable and beautiful essay on "Shelley," which was published last month, makes another "curiosity of literature." The story is told by the editor. Bishop (afterwards Cardinal) Vaughan, who knew the poet's family well in Lancashire, and had known Francis at Ushaw College, met him in London, and out of the Bishop's wish to serve him came the suggestion that he should contribute a paper to the Dublin Review. This essay was submitted and rejected. That was in 1889, just twenty years ago. When the essay was found among the poet's papers after his death, his literary executor thought it right that the Review, for which it was originally designed, should again have the offer of it, since a new generation of readers had arisen, and another editor, and since, it might have been added, the once obscure contributor had become famous as a poet. Thus it happened that this orphan among essays entered at last on its inheritance of fame. And for the first time in its career of seventy-two years the Dublin Review passed into a second edition.

SOME GOSSIP ABOUT THE AUTHOR FOLK.

The superstition about sitting at table in a Company of thirteen is the subject chosen for each of three short stories which are soon to appear. The first will be published in the June Century, and is entitled "With the Coin of Her Life." Owen Wister, Margaret Deland and Dr. S. Weir Mitchell are announced as the respective authors of the three stories, which are to be published anonymously. Here is an opportunity for some shrewd guesses.

Houghton Mifflin and Company will publish this month the 1909 Ingersoll Lecture delivered at Harvard University on April 9th by Mr. G. Lowes Dickinson of King's College, Cambridge, England. The subject of the lecture is "Is Immortality Desirable."

Mrs. Humphrey Ward has gone to Cadanabbia, Lake Como, to work on her new novel. This will be [illegible] of Canada. American Institutions will be the general subject of the lectures delivered by Prof. Bliss Perry, who has been chosen Hyde Lecturer to the University of Paris for the school year 1909-10. Mr. Perry is well known as the editor of The Atlantic Monthly and as the author of "The American Spirit," "Walt Whitman," and other books.

G. Lowes Dickinson, author of "Letters of a Chinese Official," "A Greek View of Life," "Justice and Liberty," etc., has come over to England to spend a few months in the United States. Last Fall Doubleday, Page and Company purchased all of Mr. Dickinson's books from the McClure Company. "The Letters of a Chinese Official" are now translated into Esperanto.

O. Henry is at work on a new book, has just published a new volume of short stories entitled "Roads of Destiny." It is not generally known that O. Henry once owned, published and illustrated a little paper in Texas. There is an interesting article about this elusive author in The Critic's Work for June.

The next morning the man of the house was far from either looking or feeling well. At breakfast he sat listlessly toying with his toast and coffee, while his spouse sat stonily regarding the captives with the eye that had produced the Pueblo.

Scientist in Rito De Los Frijoles Canyon Near Santa Fe Finds Story of Remarkable Prehistoric Civilization.

[SPECIAL CORRESPONDENCE OF THE TIMES.]

SANTA FE (N. M.) May 12.—A thousand or two thousand years ago, or perhaps contemporaneous with Ur and Nineveh, there flourished twenty miles west of Santa Fé, in the lower Rito de los Frijoles Cañon, an interesting community, or rather group of populous pueblos that had attained as high a degree of culture as the Pueblo Indians of today, in fact, must have been farther advanced in some respects, for they supported thousands where a dozen Pueblo Indians would find it difficult to make a living, and some of the pottery and instruments that they left to puzzle future generations of another and superior race, cient culture that here had its seat and is excelled in scenic beauty by few, if any, others. It is truly a wonderful spot and is bound to become a pleasure ground for thousands of tourists and travelers in time. The Archeological Park of Colorado, Yellowstone Park and the Garden of the Gods are greater in extent, have more spectacular ruins, but they lack the unity of the Frijoles and do not create the well-defined and vivid impression of the New Mexico cañon.

The approach to the gorge is one of magnificent culture that here had its seat and is excelled in scenic beauty by few, if any, others. plan. A few yards to the east is another mound, also the débris of a building, and still farther down the cañon another immense circular structure, at first taken for a reservoir, but upon examination found to be the most wonderful kiva as yet found in the Southwest. It is a walled structure forty-two feet in diameter, the largest subterranean sanctuary reported anywhere thus far in this part of the country. It could not be roofed by its builders without support, and therefore four holes for supports are found around the fireplace depression, which is not in the center, but a little to one side. Unlike other kivas, it had not only an air shaft to the east, but one to the west, and had the distinction of having a double wall of tufa blocks around it. To add to this wonder, there is found the stone floor of another kiva, showing that this ancient people had a dual organization similar to that of the people of San Ildefonso, Santa Clara and other pueblos of today, that is a division into a winter and a summer people each with their own kivas, one above and one below ground.

This great pueblo alone would make the Frijoles a wonderland, but it is only one of five pueblos, another, located on the southern rim of the cañon, having been partly excavated. In addition, caves in the north wall of the cañon, in the comparatively short space of one and a half miles, present the remains of fourteen communities in all, and the most wonderful of these is the talus at the feet of these fourteen communities. Prof. Hewett and his party discovered eleven more pueblo communities that had been built against the cliffs, in some instances in terraces of four stories high. These cliff dwellings have, at the least calculation, 1600 rooms. It was certainly a dense population for so small a valley. No archeologist had ever dreamed that this settlement was so extensive.

The researches in the Frijoles have only begun. Recently these cliff dwellings, which are situated in the Jemez National Forest, were proclaimed a national park by the government, and thus are protected from vandalism. The recent Territorial Legislature passed a law creating the New Mexico Museum, which law has for its object the further exploration and preservation of these ancient ruins. The sum of $5000 a year is given by the Territory to maintain this museum, and in addition almost $10,000 was appropriated to place the famous Old Governor's Palace, the most historic building in all the Southwest, built over 300 years ago, in proper shape to house this museum and the branch school of American archeology, which is to be established in Santa Fé. The establishment in the ancient capital of New Mexico of this school of archeology is expected to annually draw thousands of tourists to this interesting region. The school will be conducted in connection with the New Mexico Museum, and will be endowed, it is said, by $500,000 within a year. The researches will be resumed again in the fall, when still more startling discoveries are expected to be made in this prehistoric region.

The more artistic and possess a better finish than the wares manufactured by the Pueblos of today.

Such are the conclusions that have been drawn from the recent wonderful discoveries made in this prehistoric region by Dr. Edgar L. Hewitt, director of the American School of Archeology, and his party of archeological students, who recently completed a preliminary research of this interesting region, which, when fully investigated, promises to enrich the exhibits of the Archeological Institute of America a hundredfold.

The great age of this prehistoric civilization brought to light within sight of the ancient city of Santa Fé is attested by the fact that decided climatic changes have occurred since it flourished and by other evidences less convincing to the lay mind, but conclusive to the archeological student. That this civilization was rudely disrupted by some conquering tribe or horde from the north seems apparent and upon these facts may be based the logical theory that these ancient, prehistoric people retreated before their foes to Mexico, Central America and perhaps, Peru; that the nomadic invaders bore away some in captivity and learned from their captives their arts and that admixture of blood of captives with that of their captors produced the Pueblos.

The explorations in Rito de los Frijoles recently finished, were really an undertaking by the Santa Fé Archeological Society under the direction of the Archeological Institute of America. The Rito de los Frijoles is twenty miles west in an air line from Santa Fé. According to Dr. Hewett, who has spent many years in the archeological fields of America, from Canada to Central America, the Rito de los Frijoles is one of the most interesting cañons in America, both in scientific as well as human interest of the ancient scenery. The walls of the rim of the cañon drop an average of five hundred feet from the mesa above. The cañon is cut through the soft tufa rock which flowed aeons ago from the Jemez Range of now-extinct volcanoes in the near vicinity. It is in this range that the Frijoles rises, but it is only the lower three of its twenty miles that are of special interest to the archaeologist. The north cañon walls are broken by a bench forty to fifty feet wide, while from the base of the cliff slopes a talus down to the valley where purls the beautiful mountain stream, which, lower down, not far from its junction with the Rio Grande, drops in two magnificent falls of seventy and eighty feet to the level of the upper ledge of White Rock Cañon, a most inspiring gorge in itself, at some points fully a thousand feet deep. The ruins of the great pueblo, now partly excavated, are roughly circular in shape. The pueblo was built in accordance with a well-defined plan, around a court. The structure is seven rooms deep and contained originally from seven to eight hundred rooms. About four hundred of these rooms can be restored, it is believed, and upwards of fifty have already been excavated, clearly demonstrating the type of the ruin. This differs from the other haphazard structures of pueblo ruins, the latter resulting from additions to the original building by the building of more rooms as the girls of the family or the clan were married, it being the custom for the bride to build a room adjoining her mother's room, into which she moved with her husband. In this great pueblo of the Frijoles there were three kivas or ceremonial rooms within the court. The smallest of these, thirty feet in diameter, has been excavated and resembles the estufas or kivas of the modern pueblos, with their shaft and vent hole on their east wall. In those days, it seems, the same as today, each clan, the Sun, Eagle, Turkey, Tur-

HEREABOUTS.

R. E. PARR of New York, one of the guests at the Hayward, is convinced that New York City will never elect Theodore Roosevelt Mayor. "I don't think that many people in New York have taken this boom of Roosevelt for Mayor very seriously," said Parr. "Furthermore, I don't think that Mr. Roosevelt would be elected. New York needs a strong man for Mayor, for conditions there are pretty bad, just as they are in any city that attempts the impossible in the suppression of vice, but Roosevelt would hardly be the man the voters would agree upon. A few months ago Roosevelt would have carried the city by storm, I should think. But since that time he has been out of the country, chasing lions and rhinoceroses in Africa. That might be great sport, but many people in New York consider it a poor bid for advertising. Roosevelt no longer has the prestige he did have before he went out of office. New York would want a new man. My politics? Oh, I'm a Democrat, all right. Yes-s-s-sir."

A. Kreidel, a business man from San Francisco, registered at the Angelus, notes a general improvement in business throughout the West, but especially in Los Angeles and San Francisco. "Business is better than it has been for a long time," said Kreidel. "So much so that a large Chicago concern is about to establish a branch factory on the Coast for the manufacture of shirts. It might not occur to anybody outside of the trade, but the character of shirts worn by the public is about as good a sign of the general business conditions as one could well wish for. When men—now, I mean the general run of men—begin to feel the least bit uneasy about their finances, their shirt purchases are about the first to show it. It is an old saying about a man taking his shirt off his back to help a friend, but when it comes to times of financial depression, you may bet that this big-hearted man will be taking a cheap shirt off to give to the fellow in distress. When times improve, men will grow more fastidious about their shirts, and let me tell you that they are all wearing good shirts, these days, especially in Southern California."

Claim jumpers in Arizona will soon have something to jump for, according to a statement by J. F. Hechtman of Globe, who is at the Hollenbeck. Mr. Hechtman is a prominent mining man from Gila county. "Claim jumpers have given us considerable trouble in the past," said Hechtman, "and they seem to be getting busy again in certain parts of the Globe district. The mining congress is to meet at Globe Saturday night, when remedies will be discussed. Under the law it is practically impossible to reach the claim jumpers, who tear down location signs and monuments and boldly lay claim to assessment work that has been done. We hope to find a means of stopping the practice," he concluded, with a significant wink. In the Northwest, claim jumping was ended by committees of the Mining Congress who summoned the contending claimants, heard their arguments, and settled the case out of hand without expensive litigation or any recourse to lawyers. The man who was brought before these sessions too frequently, leading to the suspicion that he was making a practice of jumping claims, was quietly informed that a change of climate would be highly beneficial. Under the law, suit to quiet title is the only remedy, no provision being made for legal punishment, and jumpers in Arizona have frequently laid claim to valuable properties just when they learned that their sale was being negotiated, killing the deal unless they were bought off or "compromised with."

SCIENTISTS.

CARL LUMHOLTZ, ethnologist, explorer and author, has departed on a trip to the unexplored regions of northwestern Mexico, where he will conduct investigations in the general interest of science with the consent and cooperation of the Mexican government. Thorough study of the language, traditions, religion and decorative art of the various Indian tribes he will meet is contemplated by the explorer, who took with him a full equipment of cameras and scientific apparatus. He expects to return next winter.

Professor David, of Sydney University, who accompanied Lieutenant Shackleton on his Antarctic expedition, suggests that Australasia shall establish a permanent weather observatory in the Antarctic and connect the observatory with Australasia with wireless telegraphy.

Prof. H. E. Crampton, curator of invertibrate zoölogy in the American Museum of Natural History, New York, has started for the South Sea Islands for an eight months' investigation of the snails of that part of the world. He has already made a study of 70,000 specimens from 173 different valleys of Tahiti, and he believes that the snails of Tahiti and the surrounding islands offer about the most remarkable illustration of Darwin's theory of evolution that we have at the present time.

Dr. A. B. Lewis, assistant curator of African and Melanesian ethnology of the Field Museum, has left Chicago for a three years' expedition into New Guinea and adjacent islands, to secure a collection of curios and photographs for the museum. It is expected that more than 10,000 specimens will be added to the department.

Philip Fox, instructor in astrophysics at the Yerkes Observatory, has been chosen as successor to the late Prof. George W. Hough as director of the Dearborn Observatory and professor of astronomy at Northwestern University. The nomination of Prof. Fox has been made by the Chicago Astronomical Society, and his election by the trustees of Northwestern University will follow at their annual meeting in June.

The damage to bridges by earthquakes is due generally to the banks of valleys being drawn together, according to W. H. Hobbs, whose conclusions are based on a study of earthquakes in the United States, India and Japan, extending back to 1886. Moreover, it seems to be the general rule that a fissure or a series of parallel fissures opens during an earthquake along the banks of rivers parallel to their courses.

ARMY AND NAVY MEN.

BRIG.-GEN. C. L. HODGES, who recently returned from Manila, has been assigned to command the Department of Dakota with headquarters at St. Paul, Minn., he having preferred this post to that of Department of the Columbia, with headquarters at Vancouver Barracks.

Brig.-Gen. Albert L. Mills, in recent command of the Department of Luson, will soon assume his new command of the Department of the Gulf, with headquarters at Atlanta, Ga.

Dr. Wallace E. Sabin, one of the best known men in army life, who has served for thirty-seven years as a contract surgeon, has passed his examination for the commission of first lieutenant.

Much progress is being made in the general staff, under direction of Brig.-Gen. William W. Wotherspoon, president of the Army War College, in the working out of a scheme for reorganizing the regular army on the basis of a peace footing of about 135,000 men. The line would consist of three cavalry divisions of two brigades each, nine infantry divisions of two brigades each, and field artillery, engineers, signal corps, etc., for field operations, and sufficient coast artillery troops to man the seacoast fortifications. The scheme also contemplates the consolidation of the present quartermaster's, subsistence and pay department into one department to be known as the supply department, at the head of which will be a major general.

In accordance with the new policy of releasing naval officers on the retired list from active duty and thereby greatly reducing expenses, an order has been issued relieving Rear-Admiral C. M. Chester, retired, from all duty at the Navy Department from June 30 and granting him permission to remain abroad one year. Rear-Admiral W. S. Cowles, retired, chief of the bureau of equipment, Navy Department, will shortly be relegated to private life.

Col. John P. Wisser of the Coast Artillery Corps, at present on duty in the office of the Chief of Staff of the Army at the War Department has been ordered to assume command of the artillery district of Savannah, with station at Fort Screven, Ga.

Capt. Harry L. Jones, master of the United States steamer General Alexander, has been presented a medal of honor by the War Department for bravery in rescuing two men from drowning in San Francisco Bay, January 6, last.

OVER THE SEAS.

KING LEOPOLD, who has already sold four paintings to Paris dealers, a Rubens, a Hobbema and two Hals, has now decided to sell his gallery of pictures. They have been offered to big dealers on the continent and in London. Now that the Congo Independent State does not yield to King Leopold the immense sums he formerly received from that source it is stated that he intends to sell everything he owns for which he can realize large sums.

Lord Wolseley, who used to be known in England as "our greatest general," is in straitened circumstances and has given up his residence, the Farmhouse, Glynde, Sussex, owing to the expiration of his lease, and the furniture and contents of the modest little mansion have been disposed of by auction.

The German Emperor is in the peculiar predicament of having no less than two doubles. One, a certain Herr Nitsche, follows the humble and prosaic calling of a chimney sweep. A year or two ago, when the Emperor was staying at a small German watering place, so the story goes, a tailor of the locality suddenly waking up to the fact that he was rather like His Majesty, had his mustache trimmed accordingly, copied the style of dress as nearly as possible and boldly sallied forth into the town. His reception even exceeded his own expectations, but the incident got to the ears of the authorities.

Sir Coleridge Kennard, who has just been appointed to the British Embassy in Rome, as an attaché, and who is a cousin of Howard Kennard of the British Embassy in Washington, enjoys the distinction of having been created a baronet at the early age of 6; a case unique in the annals of England. His grandfather, John Kennard Coleridge, of Fernhill, near Southampton, was nominated for a baronetcy. But before the patent could be made out he died suddenly, and as his eldest son had predeceased him, the baronetcy was bestowed instead on his six-year-old grandson. At the same time Queen Victoria bestowed the rank and precedence of a baronet's wife on the young fellow's grandmother, who is now Lady Kennard.

IN THE LIMELIGHT.

JOHN P. BRADY of Gardenville, Md., has erected a monument to Adam. The shaft bears this inscription: "This is the first shaft in America dedicated to Adam, the first man." Brady says "it was kind of Adam to come and give the rest of us a chance," hence the memorial in stone. He says Eve doesn't deserve a memorial.

Alfred Wright, a Detroit jeweler, was for a number of years an employe of the firm of Felix Mege of Cavendish Square, London, court jeweler to Queen Victoria. When he was 23 years old he remounted a number of jewels on the Queen's crown, among which was the great Kohinor diamond. He has also made jewelry for King Edward when the latter was Prince of Wales.

George S. Terry, Assistant Treasurer of the United States at the subtreasury in New York since March 22, has just given his receipt to Treasurer Treat for a total of $254,852,769.75 in cash and securities. The counting was accomplished in twenty-nine days.

Frederick Courtland Penfield, ex-United States Consul-General at Cairo, who recently married Mrs. Annie Weightman Walker, daughter and heiress of the late Mr. Weightman, the great manufacturing chemist of Philadelphia, has made an offer to the Khedive to defray the expense of transporting an obelisk from Upper Egypt and reërecting it at Cairo, the Egyptian government to bear no expense in the matter.

Capt. Joshua Card, for 37 years keeper of Fort Point light at Newcastle, has retired, and the government has commemorated his faithfulness by making his record a part of the log of Fort Point light.

Mayor Arthur of McKeesport, Pa., who is a police magistrate, has decided that men convicted of intoxication must sign papers permitting their wives to draw their salaries for one year. In the cases of unmarried men the next kin will draw the salaries. The alternative is six months in the workhouse.

Effort has been made to persuade William Allen White, editor of the Emporia Gazette and magazine writer, to enter Kansas politics in the next State campaign as candidate for Lieutenant-Governor. In a letter written en route for Europe, Mr. White wisely declines to fetter his public usefulness in any such fashion.

EDUCATORS.

MISS LIDA SHAW KING, dean of the woman's college at Brown University, Providence, R. I., has recently refused the call to become dean of Barnard College of New York at $4000 salary. She prefers to remain at a smaller salary in Providence and place her work there on a strong foundation. Chicago University and an institution at St. Louis have also failed to draw Miss King from Brown.

Prof. Maria Sanford will retire from the faculty of the State University of Minnesota with the class of the present college year. Miss Sanford has taught continuously for more than half a century.

Dean Hurd of the College of Agriculture at the University of Maine, has been trying to interest the school children in gardening. Apparently he has succeeded, for it is announced that there will be this year over 1000 experimental gardens planted and tended by pupils in the public schools of the State.

Miss Jean Heck, the leader of the class of 1908 in the University of Cincinnati, had a higher average in scholarship than any other student who has attended the university since it was founded in 1870.

John M. Clarke of Albany, geologist of New York State, takes little stock in the claim that great quantities of gold have been discovered at Lake Placid, that State. He declares that while gold may be found in various parts of the Empire State, it is in such minute percentage that it does not pay to work it.

Prof. John Montgomery, head of the mechanical department of Santa Clara College at San José, has been officially recognized by the Austrian government as the first person to successfully master aërial navigation. The investigation of the Austrian government has been going on for a number of years, and Prof. Montgomery's successful flight of 1884 is declared to be the first known event of its kind in the world. Prof. Montgomery, since the disaster of 1906, has been forced to suspend any further experiments and flights for the time being, but will resume active work upon his aëroplane within a few months.

JUDGES.

JUSTICE CLARK of the New York Supreme Court, sitting in Rochester, recently had a word or two to say for people who go about public highways on foot. Addressing the grand jury, he declared: "The automobile is an institution which has come to stay. But the pedestrian was here first. He has certain defined rights. One of these is that he must be protected in traveling on the public highways. Careless, reckless and criminal operation of automobiles must be stopped."

For the next two years the seat of town government in Oxford, Ct., will be in a barn. J. Birdsey Sanford, who has been town clerk and registrar of vital statistics for several years, has just been elected judge of probate and treasurer. Clerk - Registrar - Judge-Treasurer Sanford found trudging to the town hall in all sorts of weather irksome, and he has installed the paraphernalia of his four offices in his barn.

Judge Moses Wright, of Rome, Ga., said in his charge to a grand jury a few days ago: "The presumption is that the newspapers tell the truth."

THE EVER YOUNG.

MRS. HESTER CORDROY of Delmar, Del., aged 112 years, is the oldest woman on the peninsula embracing Delaware and the eastern shores of Maryland and Virginia. She was born on a farm near Delmar, February 12, 1797. She has been married twice and has ten great grandchildren. She is still a most industrious woman, cultivating with her own hands two large gardens and selling the products.

Another aged resident of Delmar is Mrs. Rachel Carmine, aged 91 years. She has more descendants than Mrs. Cordroy, having seventy-one great-grandchildren and fourteen great-great-grandchildren. She has not been in good health, however, for three years.

James A. Rikeman of Jersey City, N. J., has thirteen grandchildren, all of whom were born on the 11th of April.

At Concord, N. H., Hon. John Kimball—83 years old—has just accepted the presidency of a bank.

John Rogers of Tewsbury, England, who claims descent from the Baron Rogers, who lived at the time of the Crusades, has just celebrated the hundredth anniversary of his birthday.

Coins in Queer Hiding Places.

Tuesday morning a basket containing about half a peck of currency, consisting of gold and silver, was brought from the home of the late George Zimmerman, at Falmouth, Lancaster county, Pa., and deposited in a bank at Middletown.

Since the death of Mr. Zimmerman a search of the premises is being made and money of all descriptions is being found in trunks, corners of the rooms, old boxes and many other places where only a man of the owner's eccentric nature would think of hiding it. Some of the pieces found are old and rare.—[Punxsutawney Spirit.

Kind Hearts--Good Deeds

"How far that little candle throws his beams!
So shines a good deed in a naughty world."

John Bates, the guard on a goods train on the Bletchley branch of the London and Northwestern Railroad, at the risk of his own life averted a serious collision with a passenger train. The train had been shunting at Padbury station, and during an interval of work the driver and the fireman left their engine. Suddenly the engine started—no one knows how—and dashed out of the siding. Bates, in his brake van, realized in a flash that after the train had run through Buckingham on the single it would reach Westbury, where a passenger train from Banbury would be standing. With no thought of his own personal danger he crawled from his van forward over the cars, hanging over the side of each, one after another, and loosed the long lever which put the brakes on. His work soon told. The engine could not pull the dozen heavy trucks with their brakes on, and it stopped about a mile on the Westbury side of Buckingham station.

Mrs. Henry Fuhrman of Seattle, recently deceased, left bequests for the payment of $17,000 to several charitable organizations. The chief gift is $10,000 to the Orthopedic Hospital which is concerned with the treatment and care of destitute crippled or sick children, especially those deformed from birth or as the result of accident or disease.

For the benefit of a 2-year-old child whom he had never seen, Sefrid Batson, a 50-year-old man in St. Louis, recently allowed 250 pieces of skin to be transferred from his body to that of the child who had been badly burned. The man voluntarily underwent the pain and danger involved in the more than an hour's operation.

"One of the kindest acts I ever knew a man to perform was that done by John R. McLean, owner of the Washington Post, to a beaten, dispirited, dead broke and down-and-out pugilist," said J. F. Durham, a well-known writer and traveler in the Baltimore American.

"It was in 1882 when Mr. McLean was living in Cincinnati and in active control of the Enquirer. The whole nation had been in a state of excitement over the outcome of the fight between John L. Sullivan and Paddy Ryan at Mississippi City. The talent thought Ryan would annihilate the Boston boy, but the smart men were wrong, and poor Paddy's star went down in permanent eclipse. He had barely enough money to get back to Cincinnati, and was in a most deplorable condition in the town where he had been a lion for several weeks preceding the encounter. There is not on this terrestrial globe such an utterly 'dead one' as the beaten knight of the fistic arena; defeat means for him not the ordinary humiliation of failure, but the desertion of the multitude. Every one turns his back on him. It was so with Ryan. Hearing of his forlorn state and that he was penniless to foot, Mr. McLean dispatched a trusty aid to the dejected one, bearing a message of cheer, and what was more to the purpose, a roll of bills amounting to $500 in good American money. The fallen idol of the ring had no claim upon the donor—it was simply an act of true goodness and humanity."

By the death of Mrs. Christopher L. Magee of Pittsburgh, which occurred at her winter home in Rome, Italy, on Monday night, a fund estimated at $5,000,000 will become available for the construction of a hospital for women in Pittsburgh.

Mrs. Russell Sage has seen the fruition of her half-million gift for a gymnasium addition to the naval branch of the Y.M.C.A. building near the Brooklyn navy yard. The building has been completed and opened, and is pronounced one of the finest and largest gymnasiums in the country.

The main building was the gift of Miss Helen Gould about seven years ago.

The Hobgoblins of Science.

After June 1 Montclair bakers must deliver their bread in "sealed aseptic bags," so that no microbes may get in it.

The fears of the Psalmist regarding the pestilence that walketh in darkness and the destruction that wasteth at noonday were merely a mild form of vague apprehension by comparison with the vivid alarm now excited by bacilli and bacteria. These microscopic foes of man have taken the places of the giants and the hobgoblins of former days. In the new folklore of fear it is the invisible dwarfs of disease that wage eternal warfare on man. They are the terror by night and the arrow that flieth by day.

Aseptic boxes for handkerchiefs, aseptic bags for bread—what next in the evolution of the microbe mania? The wonder grows how the race has been kept from extinction exposed as our grandfathers were to the unchecked ravages of these subtle enemies.—[New York World.

Drawing Money in Paris.

If you present a letter of credit at one of the great banks in Paris, like the Credit Lyonnais, an usher in livery receives you in a splendid parlor, like the salon of a palace, and bids you be seated in a sumptuous chair. Presently he brings you a check, made out for the amount you demand, for your signature. A quarter of an hour later he brings you the cash on a silver tray. You do not come in contact with the clerical force, or see the inner workings at all. If you wish to cash a local check or get a bill changed, you go to another waiting-room, where an usher hands you a brass disc with a number stamped on it. As each number is called by a crier, the holder steps to a window and transacts his business. As the numbers are called in French, it is quite essential to understand the language to that extent anyway.—[May Travel Magazine.

Plowed Up Rare Silver Coins.

While plowing in a neglected field on the Floyd county (Ky.) border, Jasper Welch, a poor farmer, unearthed $800 in silver coins, some of which are rare specimens.

The place was once occupied by an old miser, who, no doubt, secreted the money there and in after years perhaps forgot the location of his treasure.—[Exchange.

GREAT HOME-MAKING PRIZE CONTEST

Valuable Prizes Absolutely Free to Readers of The Times

A prize contest which should interest every member of every family who has a home, or expects to have one.

By the use of good taste and pratical sense in the ideal arrangement of a living room, win a prize which will beautify your home.

Mr. and Mrs. Homer Newhouse and family have come to Los Angeles to live, and are furnishing a home. The family consists of father, mother, son Horace, aged 20, daughter Margaret, aged 18, Kenneth, a boy of 8, girl of 6 named Jane, the baby, a maid and a cook.

The living room is the center of the home. Here the family gather to pursue their various occupations, here the family life is principally lived. It is, in a way, the altar of the household. Show us the living room of any household, and we will be able to judge of the character of the family. Their pursuits, their tastes, their circumstances are here indicated.

The Newhouse family, true to their belief that individuality should be cultivated, decided that each member of the family should choose some article for the living room, while all combined in the choice of others. Not a little pleasant rivalry was thus occasioned, in the effort of each to procure the best at the most reasonable expenditure. To maintain individuality of taste, yet to harmonize the whole.

"Kenneth complains," said Mrs. Newhouse, "that he chose his own special easy chair too well. He says it is so very comfortable and inviting that everybody who comes into the room selects that chair, and he never gets a chance to enjoy it himself. I tell him he should be satisfied with the compliment to his good judgment."

"On the other hand, that tall, straight chair, Mr. Newhouse has dubbed 'the seat of the unwelcome guest.' We do not have many such guests, but whenever we do have one, father declares that we seat him in that place. I appreciate the criticism, and shall eventually remove the chair to the attic."

CONTEST RULES. From the articles pictured throughout the advertising columns of THE TIMES, in this issue and during the week, ending Saturday, May 29th, cut out such pieces as you choose for furnishing a living room. In the space marked "Floor Space of Living Room" paste such pictures of furniture, rugs, etc., as you select, placing them in such positions as they would naturally occupy in a room. In the window spaces, paste curtains. In the door spaces, paste draperies. Upon the wall spaces, paste pictures. Arrange bric-a-brac to suit. In fact, furnish these spaces as you would furnish your own living room.

MAKE A LIST of the articles chosen by you, as furnishings for the pictured living room, the name of the firm from which they are chosen, and the price, when price is given. You are not limited as to the number of articles chosen, but they must be only from those pictured in the advertising of THE TIMES, during the period of this contest.

THIS PAGE will appear only in this issue of the Sunday Times. Extra copies may be purchased at The Times office.

IMPORTANT! Contestants may clip pictures, for use upon this page, from the advertising columns of the Daily Times, throughout the week ending Saturday, May 29th—ANY DAY AND ALL DAYS.

PLAINLY WRITE your name and address on the line marked for them.

SEND TO THE TIMES OFFICE THIS ENTIRE PAGE.

THIS CONTEST CLOSES on Saturday, May 29th, at 6 o'clock p. m.

JUDGES OF THE CONTEST. A committee from among the advertising agencies of the city will pass upon the pages submitted in this contest, thus assuring an impartial decision.

PRIZES. The Times will award the following prizes in this contest: For the best selection and most tasteful arrangement of articles in the pictured living room—

First Prize—Living room table.
Second Prize—Crex easy chair.
Third Prize—Clock.
Fourth Prize—Solid oak mission finish rocker.
Fifth Prize—Set of dishes, 38 pieces.
Sixth Prize—Set of dishes, handsomely decorated, 38 pieces.

ANNOUNCEMENT. Prize winners will be announced as soon as decisions can be reached.

Venice Branch Rest Room.

At a special meeting of the Venice branch, it was decided to proceed immediately to build the "rest room," so that it will be ready for the opening of the season. The use of a lot on the corner of Horizon and the ocean front has been donated by Mrs. George Sibley and the society will put up a building 30x32 feet in size. This building will contain one large room, a small kitchen and lavatory; with a wide porch across the front.

The ladies have had an old-fashioned "raising bee," to which every man in Ocean Park was asked to contribute part or all of a day's work. Of course, carpenters were especially asked, but any man who can drive a nail or lift a board was not omitted.

The men were requested to bring the requisite tools and a good appetite. The latter being a special requisite, as the ladies were on hand with a substantial and bounteous dinner, consisting of all good home made things imaginable and steaming pots of coffee.

Those beach men who were too busy to attend and help were offered the privilege of donating the price of a day's labor to apply on the lumber or plumbing bills.

Practical Sunshine.

Sunshine, like charity, begins at home. One of our writers in the Ladies' Home Journal says to make the sunshine of the home is the most loveworthy thing a girl can do. It puts a song in the heart. To allow others to be mistaken sometimes, to give up your own point, will prevent some one's being chaffed or fretted. To be blind to cross looks and deaf to cross words—patient toward the temporary irritability—these are some of the ways to secure steady home sunshine.

It helps toward cheerfulness if we never allow ourselves to say anything gloomy. Complaints of anything—even the weather—create feelings of discontent that are contagious, if not irritating.

Outside the home do what you can do. Not what you cannot do. Not what you think ought to be done. Not what you would do if you had more time and money. Not what some one else thinks you ought to do. But do what you can. If more of us could only realize this: "I shall pass through this world but once. Any good therefore that I can do, or any kindness that I can show to any human being, let me do it now. Let me not defer or neglect it; we shall not pass this way again."

Many sunshiny letters have been received from the readers of this column. Very often when these writers are sought they themselves are very much in need of sunshine. Wasn't George Elliot right when she wrote: "One must be poor to know the luxury of giving?"

Help, Sunshiners!

In our large correspondence a letter has come from Los Vegas branch of the Sunshine, asking the assistance of this branch in securing employment whereby a widow with two boys could find some means of paying part of her expenses and have a rest from her duties as school teacher. She is neat, attractive, and capable and willing to do any kind of light work.

One little woman is struggling to get pupils in English or any of the high school branches, or stenography and book-keeping—a thorough teacher who had taught many years in the Y.W.C.A. in the East and helped many to higher positions or coached struggling pupils who have had to work nights. Does any one know of pupils or a position which might help this stranger?

Sunsine Motto.

Have you had a kindness shown?
Pass it on.
'Twas not given for you alone.
Pass it on.
Let it travel down the years,
Let it wipe another's tears,
Till in heaven the deed appears—
Pass it on.

Absorbed With Problems.

Mrs. M. C. of Los Angeles is interested in the work of Each and All girls, she writes:

"It has long been my earnest desire to join your ranks, but have been waiting until I could become an active member. That time is still so remote that I can wait no longer, so will ask to join the general society and the health chapter. Later on I hope to join the 'Would-be Authors,' not that I have any special literary talent, but wish to improve my mind, which is becoming rusty, through one-sided use of the brain faculties with problems which pertain to house and home keeping and financial problem. Please inclose letter to Versatile Verona, hoping that she will help me in the care of my little three-year-old shut in."

Asks Help of Girls.

Mrs. M. F. of Los Angeles asks the aid of Each and All girls in the following letter:

"I don't like to be a leaner, but I am afraid this letter will prove me one.

"I am hopeful, however, to be a lifter soon, if I can get a start. The dear, good, kind friends of Each and All have shown me many kindnesses already, though I have been a member of the society only a short time.

"I am an invalid. I have been unable to walk for over a year and have been otherwise helpless for sixteen years. I have a good, kind husband and two girls, one 8 and the other 16 years old. They are very good children, my only help when my husband is away. My husband is in need of work very badly. He was born and raised on a farm; is good with stock. We should like to get on a ranch, if possible. My husband is a steady, hard-working man, with no bad habits; he can give good references as to his ability. Now, dear girls, if any of you happen to know of a position on a ranch, I should be so glad to hear of it."

The address of the above named writer will be furnished upon request.

Likes Each and All.

Mrs. J. C. of Compton enjoys the Each and All Department, and is interested in Bible study. Her letter follows:

I do love the Each and All page as it appears on each Sunday in The Times. I would be pleased to get a membership card of the society. I would be pleased also to get the address of the dear member who sends me the Bible lesson. I have received two of them already. Would you be so kind and let me know how much postage is for them, and where to send it? When I read "Faith's" letter the same sentiment came to my mind: "look up, brighter days are coming."

I also know what it is to be in those circumstances. My husband and myself have worked for eleven years and lost everything we had made in a few hours by fire. My husband has not been able to work for the past year, for he is laid up with rheumatism. I have a little boy going to school. I would like to make the acquaintance of some nice young women about 30 years old, as I get pretty lonesome, I live in the country.

A New Member.

E. C. of Los Angeles thinks the purpose of Each and All Society splendid. She is interested in Would-be Authors' Chapter. Her letter says:

"I have long been reading your interesting department, and thought of joining the society, but have neglected it till now. I think the Each and All pledge is ennobling, and just to read it over—which I often do—makes the dear old earth seem a better place to live in or on. I would be glad to help cheer those who need cheering. In fact, I already have a few acquaintances that I feel I must do all I can to keep their spirits up until they get their bearings again, and help in any way I can, but I could, I think, perhaps sometimes find time for others besides. There are many besides shut-ins who need a word or a 'boost'—shall I say—at the right moment. There is a difference between those and the ones who never try to rise out of discouragements. Then there are those who are so swamped and overwhelmed by circumstances or sickness that nothing but a miracle can lift them or cheer them. But I am one who believes in miracles. I find so much in your Each and All page of interest.

"Inclosed please find a stamped and addressed envelope which will you forward to the 'Would-be Authors' Chapter. I think, though, there might be a nicer name selected for that branch. That is a very humiliating sort of a name. I beg to suggest it be called 'Amateur Writers' Chapter.'"

Shyness.

Shyness is usually the result of inexperience. Contact with the world will always lessen and often cure it. A bashful person is agonizingly conscious of herself and fancies that other people are thinking about her. She forgets that each person is necessarily much occupied with his ego. A friend of mine who lived in the country received a visit one day from a rural neighbor. She was distressed to find, on looking down, that there was a hole in the hem of her dress. The visitor also seemed to have his eyes fixed on this unlucky rent. Presently she could bear it no longer and said: "Mr. X, I see that you are looking at the hole in my gown. I must apologize for it, but the truth is I did not know it was there till just now." To which her visitor replied: "Oh, no, indeed, Mrs. Z. I did not notice your dress was torn until you spoke of it. I was looking at a hole which has suddenly appeared in my shoe." "Qui s'excuse s'accuse." One should rarely apologise."—[Florence Howe Hall, in Harper's Bazar.

The Clever Girl.

It's rather hard on the girl who is clever to feel that she is regarded by the majority of men—the sort of men in whose hearts lurks the old-fashioned idea that a woman is something of a household chattel—as something that should be seen and not heard. Perhaps, however, writes Karl Kramer, it is just because she is clever that she can rise above this masculine prejudice and keep right on in her own way. It takes a clever woman to live down a man's prejudice. Then, too, poor little girl, she can't help being clever, and, on the whole, the clever girl is one of the best in the entire category of the fair sex.

She's never tiresome, always entertaining and companionable, and makes the best kind of a friend to a fellow. Her cleverness helps him over bad places and her advice is always good. She's the girl that appeals, first to a man's brain and intellect, and then, if he is a real man, to his heart, which she holds, even against himself. She isn't always conspicuous for beauty, this clever girl; she is often rather plain than otherwise, but when it happens, as it frequently does that she combines beauty with cleverness she has pretty nearly everything her own way. She is ever well-poised and never appears offensively learned nor boldly aggressive. Neither is she retiringly shy. She lets her cleverness be respected rather than known, and at the apropos moment she shines forth like a brilliant light. In the household she may seem rather like a caged bird, but when the right man appears on the stage of her life, her fluttering ceases, and with the steadying influence of real love the clever girl is transformed into the clever wife and mother, and because her home affairs run smoothly her husband is satisfied, devoted and proud, and her children rise up to call her blessed among women. May the clever girl never grow less.

Strength Is Given.

You never know what you can do until you try. You do not know how much strength or skill you have until some grave emergency confronts you and new and perplexing conditions arise.

It is one of the mysteries of life how sensitive framework may become cold steel, and how much new power, like the strength of a giant, permeates a fragile physique.

Never say that you cannot do this thing or that thing; never say you will die if ever you are called upon to undergo peculiar strain and suffering; never shudder and declare that you will collapse if ever the ordeal is beyond what you at present comprehend.

Because everything will be different from your anticipations when the test comes. Sights, sounds and confusions will be minor details; the old conditions and the artificial and supersensitive will become insignificant; the world, the flesh and the evil will be on the outside, something apart, and you but a mechanism, howbeit with an alert brain and a loving heart, taking up the new and the strange, treading easily, howbeit carefully, in the hitherto unknown path of peculiar helpfulness.

"For, don't you see, even with the worst happening, that you are still on earth, an active, breathing personality?" asks Clara Reese.

Ah, there is always strength. Strength for the unexpected burden, strength for the hitherto impossible tasks, strength to bear defeat, to relinquish, to go down to the very gates and still be able to smile instead of to weep.

It is one of the mysteries of life just how much strength is generated; strength for sleepless nights, for irregular meals, for courage to stand at the post; strength to forget self and its small whims and likes and dislikes; for courage, for duty, for vigil with the dying and the dead.—[Unidentified.

Thirty-seven Years.

'Tis thirty-seven years, you say.
Well, well! It seems but yesterday
Since, with love and pride,
I kissed you first, my bonnie bride,
And tried to laugh but only cried,
I was so happy by your side.

Thirty-seven years have fled
Since dawned the happy day we wed,
Then struggling thro' this world of strife
And meeting bravely trials of life,
You by my side, sweet, brave, true wife.

Together we have suffered woe,
And anguish, only parents know,
Have knelt beside our children's biers
And mingled sobs and mingled tears,
And felt the emptiness of years
When mother earth embraced our dears.

But other children came and smiled,
Black sorrow from our hearts beguiled,
Sweet little lips taught us to speak
"God's will is best" in voices meek.
Light little feet led us to seek
The path God paved for mortals weak.

Thirty-seven years have flown,
Our babes to men and women grown;
While swiftly passed the light-winged years,
The years of mingled joy and tears,
The years of mingled hopes and fears
That strengthen hearts but never sears.

Now children and grandchildren fill
The room and sing and laugh with will.
"Oh, come, old lady, what you say?
We will forget our hair is gray,
Renew our youth this blessed day,
Be children with our children gay."

STREAKS OF LIGHT.

Remarkable Phenomenon Witnessed in Gulf of Mexico on a Very Dark Night.

[St. Louis Republic:] A most remarkable marine phenomenon was observed by the steamship Dover, Capt. Yon A. Carlson, as that vessel steamed to Tampa from Mobile. When at a point thirty-five miles from Mobile Light the ship ran suddenly in a streak of light coming from the water, which alternated blue and green, the colors being so brilliant that the vessel was lighted up as if she were covered with arc lights with colored globes.

A half-mile streak of dark water, and blackness that settled like a pall over the ship, followed and a second streak of the same brilliant-hued waters was encountered. The second streak was about as wide as the first one, and when the ship ran out of it the same black waters and a night of exceptional blackness was also encountered. A. D. Montmollion, traveling freight agent of the line, was on board the vessel, and he and Chief Engineer T. J. Cole fully substantiated Capt. Carlson's statement regarding the phenomenon.

"I have sailed the high seas for twenty-two years," declared Capt. Carlson, "and have seen interesting phenomena, both meteorological and otherwise, in the waters of every known ocean, but I never saw anything that approached this blue and green light from the water phenomenon. The night was dark, but clear, and we ran into the streaks without any seeming warning. I was in the pilot house when we struck it, and I ran out on deck, thinking that something was on fire.

"The crew tumbled out to witness it also, and it was magnificent. It was so light that it was remarked by the chief engineer that it could be read by, and to make sure I grabbed a paper and the finest print that I could find was easily discernible. We ran out of the streak into a streak of black water and the darkness of the night seemed to increase as we did so. From the streak of blackness we ran into the second streak of lighted waters. Each of the streaks and the intermediate streak of black water was about half a mile wide. The wind at the time was a light northwest. The sea was smooth, and we were bearing southeast by east, half east, thirty-five miles from Mobile Light."

Bird That Chirps Kisses.

A flock of starlings has taken possession of the deep recesses on top of the Manual Training High School in Seventh avenue, Brooklyn, N. Y., and much trouble has resulted. They imitate the human whistle so accurately that motormen on the Seventh-avenue trolley line stop their cars repeatedly, thinking persons are signaling for them to halt.

That is not the worst of it, however. Any one who knows anything about a starling knows it can imitate the sound of a human kiss to perfection, and through that gift, the birds are keeping the high school students, particularly the girls, in a ferment of excitement.

"If you don't stop letting on you're kissing me I'll tell Professor Larkins on you," one girl said to a boy student.

"I didn't do anything," the surprised boy said.

"You did, and if you do it again I'll—" and just then she glanced upward and there was a beautiful and graceful bird, with black plumage and white bill, chirping kisses galore at her.

"I guess I'm vindicated," the boy said, and the girl sorrowfully remarked he was.

One of the starlings that have taken refuge on the top of the Manual Training High School seemingly is an escaped pet. He whistles fragments of several popular melodies.—[New York Press.

wo divisions of the fifth grade showed written work, map drawing from memory, drawing and coloring of pottery, and artistic book covers. The girls of this grade also exhibited beautiful specimens of their sewing. The daintily stitched and trimmed aprons of these girls brought much praise. The aprons ticketed "Mary" and "Fannie," were two of the prettiest of the collection.

The wonderful map drawing of the B class of the sixth grade, won much admiration from visitors. Here were specimens of maps drawn from memory and production maps. In these last products of the different countries of the world were shown.

The girls of the B class for their sewing work exhibited little underskirts made of different materials, while the girls of the A class showed specimens of buttonhole making, embroidery, cutting and fitting and trimming in the dainty corset covers. The drawing and color work by this grade was especially fine.

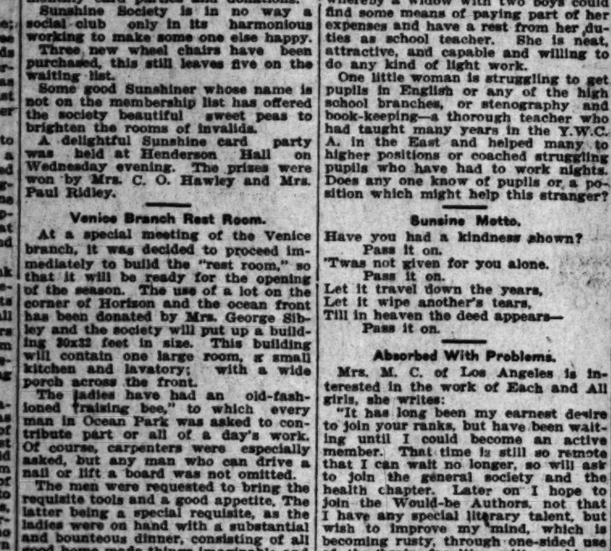
The seventh and eighth grades exhibited the advance work of the school. The perspective drawing and color work of this class was very near perfection. The decorative design work of the class was very fine.

In connection with the art work this class has made a number of beautiful books, in which the works of different artists are illustrated; these are used in connection with the art work, to familiarize the children with the work of noted artists.

A clever exhibition of drawing work was shown on the blackboards of the ungraded room. One of these drawings represented a perfect battleship, the work of one of the boys. Another drew an illustration of a trip around the world, and Loren Eads, who is a great grand Nephew of Capt. Eads, celebrated in connection with the jetties at the mouth of the Mississippi River, drew his idea of the Panama Canal.

In honor of Peace Day, which was observed during the week, each of the desks in the ungraded room was decorated with a tiny American flag.

The work of the cooking department of the school was exhibited by fifty-two specimens of cookery. All manner of good things to eat were there—breads, cakes, jellies and confections of all kinds. Fifty girls are in the cooking department of the school. Essays written by the young cooks on different articles of food, were also attractively arranged and made part of the exhibit of the cooking department.



George Steckel, Jr.,

the name of this bouncing blue-eyed baby boy of Los Angeles, who stole a march on all the baby beauties of Sacramento by wresting a prize right from under their pretty noses, at the recent baby show held there.

The sloyd department made a very creditable showing of work. The most noteworthy of this exhibition were a large book shelf made by Howard Benford, a pretty tabourette by Walt Wirz, a hall seat by Herbert Holder, a table by Paul Howe, a center table by Hugh McClellan, and woven-top stools made by Burdette Haney and Joseph Aullenbrock. The fifth, sixth, seventh and eighth grades of the school all attended the sloyd department. The school will graduate a class of twenty-five at the close of the session.

Only a Boy.

I am only a boy with a heart light and free,
I'm brimming with mischief and frolic and glee,
I dance with delight or I whistle or sing,
And you'd think such a boy never cares for a thing.

But boys have their troubles, though jolly they seem,
Their thoughts can go further than most people dream.
Their hearts are as open to sorrow and joy,
And each has his feelings, though only a boy.

If I go for a walk, it is "Here, keep off the street;"
If I go to the house it is, "Mercy, what feet."
If I take me a seat, it is "Here, give me that chair;"
Or if I stand by a window, it is, "Don't loiter there."

At school or at church I am so in the way,
At home it is this: "Do you hear what I say?"
And I'm scolded or cuffed if I make the least noise,
Till I think in this wide world there's no place for boys.

When talking you'd think we'd had the the whole say,
Of stopping with them when we were passing this way.
So have patience, dear people, though oft we annoy,
For the best man on earth once was only a boy.

A. KIDDER.

George Steckel, Jr., little son of Mr. and Mrs. Steckel, is the name of the pretty blue-eyed baby pictured today. While on a visit with his mother to Sacramento, this darling of a sly boots, captured the prize for being the bonniest baby boy under one year old at the show. George is just nine months old and weighs 25 pounds.

A Wonderful Musician.

Wanlyn Carswell, young daughter of Mrs. Edith Carswell, is already a wonderful musicion for one of her tender years. The little lady is just 14, but has already attracted much attention by her artistic playing of both piano and violin. Wanlyn has had a passion for music ever since she can remember, and her talent in that line is being carefully cultivated under the direction of both Mr. and Mrs. Thilo Becker. Both of her teachers predict a career for this little girl, whose winning personality lends an added charm to her talent.

Fun from the Tots.

Willie: Mamma, they say history repeats itself—don't they?

Mother: Yes, dear.

Willie: Well, why don't it repeat itself when I'm trying to learn it?

Johnny: They must have an awful big baby over at Meeker's house.

Pa: What makes you think so?

Johnny: Why I heard ma say today that every one in the house was wrapped up in him.

"Ma," said a newspaper man's son, "I know why editors call themselves 'we.'"

"Why?"

"So's the man that doesn't like the article will think there are too many people for him to tackle."—[Christian Work and Evangelist.

First Little Girl: Your papa and mamma are not real parents. They adopted you.

Second Little Girl: Well, that makes it all the more satisfactory. My parents picked me out, and yours had to take you just as you came.

First Servant Girl (with just pride:) We have matting at our church.

Second Servant Girl (even with more pride:) Well, we've a fine strip of linoleum up the aisle, and the vicar burns insects every Sunday.

"Mamma, what is heredity" asked Bobby, shedding a few tears and laboriously tripping over the syllables of the long word.

"Why, it is—it is something you get from your father or me," replied the mother.

Silence of two minutes and more tears. "Then, ma," he asked, "is spanking hereditary?"

KING LEOPOLD'S PICTURES.

Likely to Be Sold by the Erratic Monarch to Prevent Becoming His Children's Property.

[Exchange:] King Leopold's pictures, of which an inventory is now being made, are likely to come upon the market ere long. They represent, according to expert valuation, several millions of dollars, and he is anxious above everything else to prevent their passing into the possession of his daughters at his death. If, at his demise, the collection still forms part of his estate, his three daughters will have a right thereto.

If he presents the collection to the Brussels museum, it is quite probable that the gift will be revoked after his death, through legal process, by his daughters, and that they will secure possession, either of the paintings, or of a sum of money representing their value; for, according to the Belgian code, the King cannot dispose of property in this way without the consent of his children, who have vested rights therein. So he is about to disperse the collection by means of sale, which will enable him to invest the proceeds thereof abroad, beyond the reach of his daughters, for the benefit of his natural children by Baroness Vaughan.

One of the finest paintings in the collection is a "Virgin," by Angelico da Fiesole, an Italian master of the fifteenth century, and to which the English government has some pretensions, for it belonged to the crown collection at the beginning of the nineteenth century, and was presented by George IV when still Prince Regent, to his daughter, Princess Charlotte of Wales. After her death, in childbirth, it became the property of her widower, Leopold of Saxe-Coburg, who, when he was elected first King of Belgium, carried it off to Brussels with him.

Another remarkable feature of the collection is a sketch by Rubins, representing the miracle performed by St. Benedict in the presence of Totila, King of the Goths. Designed by Rubens in 1630, after his second marriage, it was to have served as a painting for an altar piece for the Abbey of Affingban, but was never executed. Leopeold acquired is about thirty years ago in Paris, at the sale of the famous Tence collection, and it is valued today at $100,000.

Among the other Rubens in the collection is one representing "The Triumph of Christ Over Death and Sin," painted in 1616, which formed part of the loot which Joseph Bonaparte brought back from Spain; also a "Saint Theresa in Prayer."

Vandyck is represented in the collection by a portrait of the Brussels sculptor Dequesne, thec reator of the famous statue adorning the Manneken Fountain at Brussels. There is the most famous masterpiece of Hobbema, representing a cottage under the shade of oak trees. There are two beautiful Frans Hals portraits of children, several Van Goyens and also a couple of Rembrandts.

A second group of the collection consists of portraits, in which Sir Thomas Lawrence and Winterhalter figure largely, while the third group comprises examples of Carolus Duran, Ary Scheffer, of Delacroix, of Turner, of Alfred Stevens and of Meissonier.

Rope's End Cut Off.

An Irishman on board of a man-of-war was ordered to haul in a tow line. After pulling in forty or fifty fathoms, he muttered to himself: "Surely, it's as long as today and tomorrow; it's a good week's work for any five in the ship. Bad luck to the arm or the leg it'll leave at last. What, more of it yet? Och! Murder! The say's mighty deep ,to be sure!" After continuing in a similar strain, he suddenly stopped short, and addressing the officer, exclaimed: "Bad manners to me, sir, if I don't think somebody's cut off the other end of it! It's missing!"—[Christian Register.

Much Traveled Americans.

E. S. Wright on his last globe circling tour sat near a pair of Americans and a pair of native Britishers in a compartment of an English train. He cites these fragments of the conversation he overheard to show how grossly libeled is the English sense of humor.

The two Americans seemed to be from Pittsburgh. One of them was a trifle under the weather in consequence of having tried and tried to find something that tasted like a Manhattan cocktail. The other one looked out the window and saw some view that reminded him of home.

"What does that look like out there?" he asked his companion, expecting him, presumably, to say Pittsburgh. But his friend merely grunted, "Looks like h—— to me."

Whereupon one of the Britishers remarked to his companion: "My, but don't these blawsted Yankees get around a lot!"—[Cleveland Post Dispatch.

fourteen years old, who already gives promise of a career as a musician.

XXIV.

Two days later the Luna went down, and within twenty-four hours Joy learned that Hugo Charteris had gone down with her. She felt stunned at first, unable to analyze her emotions and, in a mysterious fashion, afraid to make the attempt. She had said that the best thing which could happen to such men as he was death, and now he was dead. During the afternoon she went alone into the forest, a black, slender, forlorn figure, with a hunted look in her eyes, the expression of a dumb creature flying from some pursuing terror. Consciously or subconsciously she traversed ground which she had trod last with Hugo at her side. Then it was winter, now it was summer; the season, perhaps, when the forest wears its least attractive garb: an overwhelming green, almost exasperatingly monotonous. The rank growth and undergrowth of trees and bushes, the lush grass, the thickets of fern awallowed her up. Above, the sun shone fiercely in an unclouded sky. His beams, piercing the leaves and grass, fell vertically upon the fertile earth, which gave forth strange odors, rich and enervating, in an intoxicating silence. The birds were mute, and the only sound to be detected by a quick ear was the faint stirring of the languorous grasses and the hum of insect wings. Suddenly, hovering near a fine oak tree, she saw that rare and splendid butterfly, a Purple Emperor. Time was when the desire to capture him would have thrilled her irresistibly. Now she watched his imperial progress with indifferent eyes, knowing that she would never chase butterflies again. She sank upon a couch of moss beneath a beech tree. Hugo Charteris was dead.

Upon such a day as this, when life was rampant, the fact seemed incredible. He had been so strong, so vigorous, so free from all physical blemish and infirmity, and because of this the man's moral weakness and uncleanness had revolted her. By some strange psychological process, the death of Hugo Charteris brought to life Reginald Charteris, the kindly comrade whom she had buried deep, whom she had regarded as murderer. Now, so to speak, he rose from the dead and sat beside her. She could see his smile and hear the pleasant inflections of his voice. He became the real man, the other dwindled and faded into an attenuated shade.

Her bitter sweet satisfaction in the thought that through the death of one the other became her inalienable possession cannot be set forth in words, but such an experience is, I fancy, common enough to all of us. The objective dies, the subjective remains, ethereal, if you like, sublimated, and in a sense artificial, but on that very account the more truly our own for ever and ever. One might go further and assert that what we are pleased to call substance can never be said to belong to us because it is essentially perishable, whereas the spirit which informs even household furniture, and hideous furniture at that, survives a conflagration. Let us cite Edward Charteris's satisfaction in the monstrous silver urn turned for him into a thing of beauty because his mother had always used it.

Joy lay for an hour in the forest. Had she been aware of it, she was not so very far from the highlying moor where Hugo had cast himself down to pass not one, but three hours. In each case, Man and Maid were acutely conscious of irreparable loss, but to the woman in her purity and innocence came the balm of a life that has lived "melodious days;" to Hugo, the maddening, gadfly thought that memory must forever be a curse instead of a blessing.

Next day she set about her preparations for leaving the rectory. The aunts and Sir Giles were informed that she meant to go abroad for a few months. After her return, the question of where to settle down could be determined. Miss Priscilla ventured to observe:

"We thought at one time that you and Esmé Burgess——"

"That was never possible," said Joy emphatically.

"We wondered at his not coming to the funeral."

"He wrote. There was a big political meeting somewhere. I quite understood."

But here she had fibbed, being sore that the young fellow should have stayed away. Her father had been so kind to him, so hospitable, in the old days. And if he had come as a friend, he would have been so welcome.

She wondered, too, why Frank Tisdale held aloof. He had attended the funeral, and then had slipped away immediately afterward. Perhaps he saw her alone with her uncle, and did not like to intrude. She would be very sorry to say good-by to Frank Tisdale.

She was thinking of writing him a letter asking him to come over, when she heard the familiar toot of his motor outside the rectory gate. A moment later, the parlor maid ushered him into the dining-room, already dismantled. In her plain black dress, absolutely unrelieved by any touch of white, she looked pale and thin. When Tisdale gazed into her eyes she turned them aside as if afraid that he might read something in their too apparent depths. Immediately she began to talk of her plans, speaking in a quick, emphatic tone, as if she were wearied to tears of protest and advice.

"I am going to travel for a few months. Pragson will take care of the dogs, and I am storing my furniture with him. You know I have five hundred a year. I'm quite rich."

"When do you go?"

"As soon as I can. There is going to be a sale of the furniture I don't value. The Aunts are furious and Uncle Giles has pronounced sentence: I am not a Mottisfont. And yet," for the first time she laughed, "you see that I live. Sit down! Smoke, if you like! It may calm my nerves. I let myself go with you, because I dare not talk freely with them. You are a friend. It is good to have such a friend."

"I'm glad you realize that."

"Why didn't you come before? You're always horribly busy, still——"

"I thought that at first——"

She interrupted him impetuously.

"It's at first that we want a friend. After the funeral, when I came back to this room——" She paused and in a firmer voice continued: "Well, you are here, and I can thank you for all your kindness." She put out both her hands, which he took and held. Then she whispered softly: "I don't regret that the end came so swiftly. He wished it so. Several times he spoke of you. 'He's a good fellow, Frank Tisdale, a capital fellow. I should have liked to have had a son like Frank Tisdale.' Can't you hear him saying that?"

"Yes."

He held her hands tighter, looking hungrily into her face.

"I had to tell you that. It meant a great deal from him."

"Perhaps it meant more than you think, Joy."

He had never called her by her Christian name before.

"Eh?"

"You see your dear father was a bit of a diplomat. And he could handle men and women as delicately as he handled butterflies. I'm sure that he knew that I would give the world to have the right to call myself his son. Joy, let me take care of you! Come and share my life!" His voice trembled oddly. "I'll be so good to you. And there'll be so much for you to do. You don't mind a flight, do you? You aren't afraid of work?"

He drew her toward him, but she resisted. With a sigh he released her. Tears were in her eyes and in her voice when she said: "I wish I could come to you, but I can't, I can't. And now"—her voice broke—"I have lost you, too."

"No, no," he whispered.

She turned and went to the mantelpiece, leaning her elbow upon it, shewing her fine, delicately-cut profile. After a pause, she said slowly, in a firm voice:

"If we are to remain friends I must tell you something. It will hurt you, but it will make our friendship possible in the future. Sit down and don't look at me!"

He sat down.

"I loved a man who was not worthy," she murmured, so low that he could hardly catch the words. "He is dead, and, perhaps, it is well that it is so, for now I can think of him kindly, think of the good that was in him, and not of the evil. Don't ask me any questions, please."

"It isn't necessary," said Tisdale. "You are telling me what I know already."

She gave a faint cry of astonishment.

"You—know?"

"Yes."

She did not speak for a few moments, trying to rally her powers, wondering what he knew and how much. Tisdale said nervously: "Now that the ice is broken. I can mention something else. When Charteris"—at his name she turned her head entirely—"was asked by you to come up to the Rectory he wanted to tell you who he was."

"Why didn't he?"

"I prevented him."

"You prevented him?" She repeated the phrase. Tisdale gave his reasons, rather haltingly; then, as she said nothing, he added with a gesture of deprecation: "You must remember that he believed you were engaged to Esmé Burgess."

With her face hidden, she asked another question.

"You and he have talked this over. When?"

"Upon the night the Luna went down."

"You saw him that night?"

"Yes."

Her face, white and piteous, flashed upon him. He could see that she scented mystery, that her instinct was alert, ready to swoop upon every word he uttered and tear the truth out of it.

"Did he tell you that he wrote to me?"

"Yes—and he showed me your answer. Because of that, because I had heard from his own lips that there was no chance for him, I thought, I ventured to hope, that there might be a chance for me."

She came close and laid her hand upon his shoulder.

"Now that he is dead I shall ask you one question: Ought I to have forgiven him?"

"How can I answer that?"

"You have answered it. In your heart, being a man, you think that real love ought to be able to pardon anything."

After a slight pause, she continued vehemently: "If he had run away with that woman, I could have forgiven him. But to stay on in her husband's house, his companion, his friend——! Oh, how shameful, how abominable! and it went on for years."

"Yes: a purgatory."

"Why do you plead his case?" She looked at him keenly. "Is it because he is dead?"

"No."

"You are not like the Mottisfonts, who think only good should be spoken of the dead?"

"Certainly not."

"In a case of this kind, one wants to know the truth. He did not look as if he had suffered. At the trial he behaved brazenly."

She spoke interrogatively, appealing to his judgment because she mistrusted her own, which hitherto—as he knew—had never failed her. Suddenly, he recalled the issues at stake. Like Charteris, before him, he had always thought of Joy Vennable as a woman with certain masculine attributes. Only masculine in the sense that the enormous majority of women are without them. He had admired her self-reliance, poise, executive ability, and, within limits, her freedom from convention, or, rather, her power of stepping bravely outside the circle of Mottisfontain tradition. It had not occurred to him that these qualities were artificial rather than natural; the result of an adored father's inability to play the part for which he had been wrongly cast. Now he saw her relaxed in mind and body, plastic, and the more alluring because her weakness solicited so subtly his strength. Hope animated him again. Here was the woman not able to stand alone, not able to resist importunity, who, sooner or later, would fall gladly into protecting arms.

He perceived much more than this. He had read her aright when he contended that she belonged to that large army of women who do not marry unless they can marry the man they love. If Joy fully realized that she loved Hugo Charteris, and that he was not unworthy of her love, she would remain single all her life. On the other hand, if she persuaded herself, or was persuaded by another, that her love had been bestowed upon an unworthy object, she would try to cast it from her as "rubbish to the void." And then, heartwhole, she might be wooed and won.

At this moment, worn out by suffering, bewildered and forlorn, she entreated his judgment, and would accept it as final. And so little was required; a careless shrug of the shoulder, the uplifted brow, the derisive smile. She would know then that if pride constrained him to decent silence concerning a rival, such silence could only be interpreted to mean reprobation.

These thoughts fluttered like homing pigeons into his mind as he heard Joy saying:

"I loved the man who worked here with us, not the man who went down upon the Luna."

"You loved an ideal man, a creature of the imagination?"

"I suppose so." She spoke grudgingly. "The other was contemptible. I couldn't have loved him, I couldn't—couldn't."

"You repeat that because you are not sure?"

The blood flew to her cheeks.

"It was cruel to say that," she faltered. "It's not easy to cast out angels or devils, when once they are in possession."

"You seem to see into my mind. If it is a devil that is tearing me, I can cast it out—and I will. Why don't you help me? Why do you stare at me so strangely?"

His face worked. And then the innumerable little acts of self-denial and self-sacrifice, the hardships patiently endured, the long hours of tireless ministration to others, the fine thoughts and aspirations, which had nourished his mind, these, ten thousand and strong, rose up and stood by him in the hour of his need.

"Why do I look at you so strangely?" He sprang from his seat, laid his hands upon her shoulders, and gazed deep into her eyes. "Because I am tempted to lie to you. Because I would give my right hand to be able to tell you in all sincerity that Hugo Charteris was a devil, and that you ought to cast him out for ever and ever. And this I can't do. He came to me that night and showed me his heart. He loathed what he had done. If he was unclean—and he would be the last to deny it—he is now clean. His love for you worked that miracle. He was leaving England because the old life had become detestable. That is the truth—I swear it."

"Thank God!" said Joy.

"You have been miserable," said Tisdale, almost with violence, "because you felt ashamed of your love, abased. You thought, perhaps, that he was amusing himself at your expense? And behind everything else was that woman, that sorceress, who has gone back to her husband."

"What do you say?"

"Didn't you know? And the husband was never his friend. That was all straw out of which the counsel made bricks. At the trial Charteris said nothing because he chose to shoulder all the blame. And now there is nothing more to add but this: You loved the man who worked here with us, who was always kind and cheery and strong. And that was the real man, the true Hugo Charteris. You made no mistake in loving him."

"And he is dead," she wailed.

He held her as in a vise, reading her through and through; then, in a voice which made her heart stop beating, he said, solemnly: "Hugo Charteris whom you drove away is dead and buried, but the other lives." Then he told her the truth.

Wearing a thick veil, Joy returned to Easthampton with Tisdale. Hugo was in his room, packing up the kit that Tisdale had bought for him, when the door opened and Joy entered. She closed the door, and stood with her back against it, confronting him. In a few words she made him understand what had passed, although the full realization of what Tisdale had done never came home to him till long afterward. When she had finished, he said, hoarsely:

"I see; you have come to say good-by."

"I have come to ask a question. Are you giving everything up because I told you to begin again?"

"Yes. Never was better advice given. And I couldn't begin again here."

"I see that clearly. Still—it's a tremendous sacrifice. Nothing I could say would make you——"

"Come to life again? No."

"Nothing I could do?" her voice faltered; she let her lids veil her eyes.

"What do you mean?" he said, hoarsely. "Is it possible that you, you would tempt me to something base? I have inflicted great distress upon my family, but the gain to them is more than the loss. But now, to come forward, to take back what I have given. You would ask me to do that?"

"I'd sooner die first," she answered.

"Then what are we talking about?"

"Perhaps I was not quite sure. Is it absolutely settled, then, that you sail to the Argentine?"

"Absolutely."

She held out her hands.

"Will you take me with you?"

Tisdale's was the last face they saw on English land. And soon it was swallowed up in the early morning mists as the big ship swung slowly into the stream. He had arranged everything. The Mottisfonts expressed amasement that he, as her doctor, had prescribed a long sea voyage. Dr. Snelgrove would have sent the young lady, with a chaperon, to Scarborough. Sir Giles, to whom Tisdale had made the formal communication, said, testily: "A sea voyage! Tut, tut! She'll meet some insligible fellow on board and marry him. You have taken a great responsibility upon yourself, Mr. Tisdale. I don't expect to see my niece again. I can hardly believe that she is my poor sister's daughter. Perhaps you know that she treated her aunts and me with extreme discourtesy. She gave me to understand that she held me responsible for poor George Vennable's death. Well, well, perhaps a long sea voyage will make her appreciate her own flesh and blood." It had been arranged that Tisdale should bring Joy on board and introduce her to Hugo, under his newly assumed name. This acquaintanceship, from the point of view of their fellow passengers, would ripen into friendship and courtship and end in marriage at Buenos Ayres.

After Tisdale's features had become indistinct, Hugo saw the flicker of a white handkerchief. The engines began to go full steam ahead. He turned to Joy.

"You ought to be standing by that good fellow's side," he whispered.

She pressed his arm.

"You want me most."

THE END.

The Song of the Vine.

Poet—
O Vine along my garden wall,
Could I thy northern slumber break
And thee from wintry exile disenthrall,
Where would thy spirit wake?
Vine—
I would wake at the hour of dawning
In May in Italy,
When rose-mists rise from the Magra's valley plains
In the field of maize and olives around Pontremoli,
When peaks grow golden and clear and the starlight wanes:
I would wake to the dance of the sacred mountains boundlessly Kindling their marble snows in the rite of fire—
To them my new-born tendrils softly and soundlessly
Would uncurl and aspire.

I would hang no more on thy wall a rusted slumberer,
Listless and fruitless, strewing the pathways cold;
I would seem no more in thine eyes
an idle cumberer,
Profitless alien, bitter and sere and old.
In some warm, terraced dell where the Roman rioted,
And still in tiers his stony theaters
heaves,
Would I festoon with leaf-light his glory quieted
And shade his thrones with leaves.

Doves from the mountain belfries would seek and cling to me
To drink from the altar, beating the fragrant airs;
Women from olived hillsides by turns
would sing to me,
Culling the olives or stooping afield
in pairs;
On gala evenings the gay little carts of laborers,
Swinging from axles their horns against evil eye,
And crowded with children, revelers,
pipers, and taborers,
Chanting, would pass me by.

Kicking Away the Ladder.

The reason republics are ungrateful is because there are so many people thereof who are ungrateful. A man will help another up the ladder of fame and when he reaches the last round and steps out on the pedestal of glory, he kicks away the ladder, and then struts about as one of God's anointed.

The criticism suggested by such an incident does not come from the man who helped raise the ladder and did the boosting; he is not affected one way or the other—he is done. But the favored one who lacks appreciation and credits himself with superior capacity, portrays himself into an attitude of ingratitude, that lowers his efficiency belittles his personality.

A man who is ungrateful is not to be trusted. One who forgets a kindness will forget a principle. He will not agree to do all that kindness implied. One does not have to quarrel with a friend, but he is a mighty small man who has to ignore him in order to disagree with him.—[Ohio State Journal.

Germany's Motorcycle Army.

An important new departure in Germany's army organization is an arrangement just concluded between the War Office authorities and the Association of German Motorcyclists in the matter of forming a corps of volunteer motorcyclists. It has been decided that only those who are dissolved from the usual military service can serve in the new corps.

In case of mobilization the motorcycle volunteers are to assemble at Berlin immediately, and the army authorities will arrange with each member the terms upon which he will place himself to go through certain periods of instruction and training every year. At first the motorcyclist corps will wear no distinctive uniform, except a special cap and a badge on the arm.

Mine Coal in Borneo.

With a capital of $600,000 there has been created at Berlin a new company styled the Sudborneo Bergwerks Aktiengesellschaft. The company intends to work a colliery in the southeast of Borneo with an area of 4000 acres. The company intends to sell the coal especially as bunker coal, which it is said to be fully equal to the Japanese coal, and better than the British Indian coal.

HUNTING AHEAD OF ROOSEVELT IN EAST AFRICA

On the Spoor of the King of Beasts

BY LORD DELAMERE

Foremost among the great hunting authorities of the English speaking world is Lord Delamere. He is credited with being the heaviest killer in the party which bagged the record number of African lions some few years ago. In East Central Africa his prowess is familiar to every native. Not long ago a locality beset with lions sent a delegation four hundred miles to call on Lord Delamere to ask him to come and wipe out the destroyers of their cattle. In this article he vividly contrasts the theory and practice of lion hunting in the region which Ex-President Roosevelt will invade.

Then we stalked gully towards a big thorn tree risabove the bush. This was where lions were said to be. The bush very open, and when we came in t of the tree the lions were just mping. There were four of them, five—an old lioness and three s, perhaps not quite full grown, with very little mane. Hassan followed close behind on his pony, shouted to him to try and keep eye on the lioness, and ran on my- with Abdulla after one of the s. This one did not seem much nned to run, and after a short ist I managed to get a bullet into somewhere just as he disappeared some thick bushes.

t that moment we caught sight of ther lion trotting along parallel to about 200 yards off. The wounded was keeping up a continuous low wling in the bushes, so, thinking would not get far away, we ran to off the other. He turned off when caught sight of us, and we had a stern chase after him, as a re- of which I was so blown I could hit him, although he was lobbing not more than 100 yards ahead. last I did get a bullet into his k. He at once turned, and, growlfiercely, came bounding a few towards us, as if trying to make his mind to charge. Whether he ld have done so or not I do not w, as my second barrel caught him the point of the shoulder, bringing on to his nose, and before he d recover himself I put in another et from my second rifle and finhim.

is more than likely he would not charged, as I have several times a lion make this kind of demonion when slightly hit, more, I k, to try to frighten his assailant than anything else. A lion that really means charging up comes quite silently, galloping very fast along the ground like a dog.

A Wounded Lion at Bay.

While this was going on we could hear Hassan shouting in the distance, so now we ran off towards the sound. When we started the shouts seemed to be almost stationary, but as we ran they got further and further off till at last we could hear nothing. We then turned to go back for the wounded lion. As we got near the place where we had left him, we could hear a tremendous row going on, men shouting, dogs barking, and the unmistakable grunts of an angry lion. Running up, we found the lion, with his shoulder broken, standing in a bush surrounded at a respectful distance by the little dogs. They kept up an incessant yapping, and every now and then the lion would make a drive at them, but they were much too quick for him with his broken shoulder, and were at him again directly he retreated to the bush. The little Midgan and one of my men were close by, yelling with excitement. As I walked up to try to get a shot without hitting one of the pack, the lion took no more notice of the dogs, but kept his eyes fixed on me. I never saw a lion look nastier, but I suppose his broken shoulder had sickened him, and I shot him without difficulty. The Midgan, after calling his dogs, had run on after us, and had come on the wounded lion. We skinned this beast, and the little Midgan rather amused us, as he got so very much annoyed because his dogs would not eat some great chunks of raw lion-flesh he cut off and offered them. We were on our way to skin the other lion when we met Hassan looking rather sorry for himself. He said that the lioness had trotted quite quietly at first, and he had brought her round in a circle towards the place where he had left us, riding alongside of her, and shouting to let us know where he was. Unluckily she crossed the track of the wounded lion, and after smelling at the blood she became perfectly unmanageable, making off at a gallop and charging him whenever he got in front to try to turn her. At last she had gone into the thick bush on some hills, where he had lost her. When we had skinned the other lion we made a cast to try to pick up the fourth, but could make nothing of him—I never got this lion, although he killed one of our donkeys the next day.

Badgering an Angry Lioness.

We had not been back in camp very long when my companion came in, saying he had run across a lioness in the hills, which he was sure was the one we had seen, as she was very angry. She had run into some long grass, and had charged out towards his men, when they were going up to When I shot she seemed to stumble forward, but recovering herself caught sight of the man on the pony, and before I could shoot again she was half way towards him, going like a flash. He had not seen her when I shot, as she was hidden by the grass, and by the time he got his pony turned around and started she was close to him. He galloped straight away from me, and I dare not fire at the lioness for fear of hitting him. For nearly 200 yards it looked any money on the lioness. She got right under the pony's tail, but did not seem to know how to strike, and at length, to my great relief, the pony began to gain on her. She at once pulled up, and turned into a bush where she lay down stretched out at full length, panting. Running up, I shot her before she could prepare for another effort. My first bullet had gone through the muscles of the forearm just below the shoulder, and being solid had only drilled quite a small hole. The natives said that the reason she could not catch the pony was because a lion could not spring before a momentary halt to crouch. If this is so, a pony could always get away from a lion galloping straight behind it, unless the pony was such a bad one that the lion could come alongside. On two or three occasions I have been chased myself in the open grass plain, but have always got a fair start, and my pony has had no difficulty in keeping out of the lion's way. A pony boy of mine was very nearly caught one day in the open. He was trying to round up a lion, and got rather too close to it on a tired pony. He only just got away. This same lion afterwards chased me and two or three of my men for quite a long time. Unless a pony falls down, I am sure there is nothing to be feared from a lion in the open, if one gives him a pretty wide berth, so as to get a start when he charges. As a rule the lion will give up the chase after 100 yards or so. This pony of Hassan's was about the best I ever saw in Somaliland. He would not put a price on it, because he said he could make quite a respectable income by making looting expeditions on its back, as it was so fast nobody could catch it.

Killing Camels to Save a Pony.

A year after this I met Hassan again, and asked him how his pony was. He said it was very well, but that he had very nearly lost it a short time before. He had been down in the waterless plain on a looting expedition with some other Eidegalla warriors. After a successful raid they split up to avoid pursuit, and Hassan was on his way home driving some of the looted camels in front of him. It was a very dry year, and although it was the rainy season, he had been unable to find any water in pools to give his pony. The result was that having been ridden hard for two or three days with little or no water to drink, the pony got beat, and at last lay down, about 20 miles from the wells they were making for. No amount of stick would get it on its legs again, and Hassan was in despair. He knew there were no villages at the wells where he could get vessels in which to carry water back to the pony, and it seemed as if nothing could be done to save it. At last he thought of a plan. Driving the camels at top speed to the wells, he gave them as much water as they could drink, and hurried them back again. He found the pony where he had left it, in a very bad way, but immediately proceeding to kill and cut open the camels, he took the water out of their stomachs and gave it to the pony, which revived sufficiently to struggle to the wells. After a few days' rest it completely recovered. Hassan added that he could very soon get some more camels, and that he would rather have cut the throats of a hundred than have lost his pony. This story shows a great deal of resource in a native, but the life a Somali leads makes him wonderfully quick at finding a way out of a fix of this kind. It was very lucky the pony was not killed by lions or hyenas while Hassan was away.

Just before Hassan's pony was nearly caught by the lioness we had a pony killed by lions, the man on his back escaping rather cleverly. At that time we had two separate camps, six or seven miles apart, each of them on the edge of the Marar Prairie, on a ban or open grass plain many miles in extent. This was the best place for lions it has ever been my luck to come across. Hardly a day passed that lions were not seen by one or the other of us, very often right out in the open, miles from any bush. It was cool, cloudy weather while we were there, and the lions seemed to do most of their hunting in the daytime. There were so many, and they were so bold, that the Somalis were quite nervous about walking through the bush in the daytime. Between us we shot 24 lions in this place in a little over a fortnight. Besides lions there was more game than I have ever seen anywhere else. Large herds of hartbeeste, oryx, and Sommering's gazelle were to be seen feeding in every direction. Besides this, in the open there were a good many ostriches and a few hunting cheetahs. In the bush at the back of our camps were Waller's gazelles, leopards, warthog, and innumerable dikdik and birds. In the rocky hills I saw several klip-springers.

One morning my companion was roused by his natives, who told him that three lions were just crossing a strip of open ground within 100 yards of his camp. Before he was ready, two or three of the men jumped on ponies and galloped after the lions—three very fine males with manes—which were by that time making off, but they had always led us on to some stony hills where we had lost them. This time the same thing happened again, so, thinking she would probably come back that night to finish the heifer, we decided to sit up for her. We therefore made an enclosure of thorns under a mimosa bush near by. The hat top of the bush came down to meet the thorns built up all around and one could hardly tell the whole thing was not a bush. In the front there was a hole to shoot through, and at the back we left an opening so that we could get inside. After this we returned back to camp, and in the evening after dinner went off again, taking my bedding on a donkey. This donkey was also to serve as a bait, for the natives had cut up and taken away the heifer. We tied the donkey by one foreleg, almost touching the fence of our zareba, and after shoving in my bedding, crawled in through the opening at the back. Two men who had come with us crammed this hole up with thorns, and then went away, talking loudly to make the lioness think that all was safe if she were anywhere near.

After looking about for some time I made out the lioness slinking along behind our bush. She would not come up to the donkey, but lay down some way off under a bush. There was no hole on that side, so I could not shoot with any certainty; and at last, needing sleep, I lay down, telling Abdulla to keep his eye on the lioness, and wake me if there was any chance of a shot. I had not slept long when he touched me, at the same time putting his hand over my mouth to prevent me calling out on being suddenly awoke. I got up on my knees, looking out of the hole, but for a moment I could not make out anything.

It was a lovely night, but even by the brightest moonlight a lion is not a very easy thing to see. There was an open glade in front of the donkey, and, at last, standing out in the open, I saw two lions. They seemed as if they could not make out why the donkey did not run away, and stood quite still looking at him. As I watched they suddenly started, and came racing towards us side by side like two enormous dogs. When the lions got up to the donkey they did not seem to stop their rush, but donkey and lions all went down with a crash together. How they actually knocked him over I did not see, as at that moment I drew back my head involuntarily, because, although we were absolutely safe inside a mass of mimosa thorns, the whole thing felt unpleasantly close. When I looked out again I could easily have touched one of the lions, which was standing with its forepaws on the donkey and its hind quarters within a few inches of our fence. The other lion was standing on the far side looking me straight in the face; but I am sure he could not see me, as the moon was right in his eyes, making them shine as if they were alight. I could only see his head, as the other lion's body was in the way, so I determined to give the one nearest me a shot. There was very little of him to be seen except his hind quarters, but he was so close I was sure the bullet would drive right through him.

Quick Shooting in a Crisis.

As the rifle came up to my shoulder it touched a branch, which seemed to make a crack like a pistol shot, and the lion turned half round to see what it was. At the same moment I fired, and he fell, rolling over and over against the fence, and roaring loudly. Thinking that in his struggles he might carry away some of our zareba, I gave him two more shots to finish him. As I shot the second time, the other lion, which had run back a few yards, came and stood close to the donkey, looking straight towards us. I pulled at his chest directly I was loaded: He plunged forward, hitting the corner of our zareba, then swerved off, and we heard him crash into a bush, where we found him stone dead in the morning. The bullet had gone through his heart. These two lions were very fine specimens. One had a thick, almost jet black mane, the other had a lighter mane, but for a wild lion very thick. There is no doubt these were the lions seen the day before, as the next day, riding over to visit the other camp, I followed their back trail to within a mile of the spot. They were in the best of condition, but empty, so that may account for their boldness.

Shortly before this I shot three times at a lion which was eating my donkey. The night was as dark as pitch. The lion took very little notice of the two first shots, although one of them hit the donkey in the ribs. The third shot was a very lucky one. The bullet hit the donkey in the stomach, and, going through, caught the lion at the junction of the neck with the chest, killing him on the spot. One would think that a 577 rifle blazed in his face at about five yards would frighten any lion. This one had killed and eaten a sheep the night before, taking it from the same village where I sat up for him.

The two foregoing stories would seem to show that a large percentage of the lions killed in Somaliland are shot at night over a bait. This is not really so, as it is quite a chance if a lion passes the place where you have a donkey tied up. Night shooting, to my mind, is a thing to be avoided, except now and then as an experience. It generally means a very disturbed night, especially if there are any hyenas about, and in the morning you are not fit for a hard day's work. Occasionally by bright moonlight it is very interesting, but if circumstances admit of lions being killed by day, it is rather like shooting a boar in a fine pig-sticking country to kill a lion over a bait at night. Sometimes it is the only chance you have of getting a lion, either because you are moving camp next day, or because the country is unsuitable for tracking. Under the circumstances you are bound to try it.

I have never myself shot more than two lions in one night, but a man whom I met in the country showed me the skins of four he had shot when sitting up over the dead body of an elephant. It was very dark or he might have got any number, as he told me he was shooting most of the night, and that in the morning there were tracks of many lions all round the carcass.

I have once or twice sat up over a dead animal. This way of getting lions is only likely to be successful when there are many hyenas about, as they make such a noise that they will attract any lion that may come past within a reasonable distance.

Dene-Holes.

These curious well-like excavations, found in Kent and Sussex, are popularly supposed to belong to the time of the Danish rule in England, says the Youth's Companion. They are invariably about three feet in diameter and seldom less than 60 feet deep. Ingress and egress were provided for by means of rude ladders or hids repes. Various explanations have been offered to account for their existence—some supposing them to have been places of refuge, others that they were connected with secret forms of worship, still others that they were dug for the extraction of chalk and flint. A. J. Philip, in a recent study of the subject, advocates the view that the holes were made to serve as silos, or granaries. They are found close together in groups, corresponding with the habit of various tribes of clustering in restricted areas.

MADAM GUDE.

Wife of Norwegian Minister Is a Charming Woman Who, Comes of an Illustrious Danish Family.

BY MARGARET B. DOWNING.

WASHINGTON, May 18.—A petite, fair-haired woman is the chatelaine of the Norwegian Legation, girlish in appearance, gracious in manner, and replete with interesting information about the land of her adoption and the land of her birth, Denmark.

"In Norway we boast of having the most democratic constitution in the world," said Mme. Gude, a few days ago, "and we have long been advocates of the simple life. Our King and Queen mingle with absolute freedom with the people, and the class problem, or the segregation of classes, is unknown. Practically, we have no social unrest, and even the woman's problem no longer vexes, since, two years ago, the ballot was freely conferred. Some five or six years ago, after some agitation and much effort on the part of the leaders of the woman's movement, municipal suffrage was bestowed. It was found that the experiment was eminently successful, and that good resulted from giving women the right to vote on all that concerned the welfare of their cities and townships. When this was clearly demonstrated, the universal suffrage was bestowed about two years ago.

"Women over 21, who pay a certain income tax, and who have suffered no legal disqualification through misconduct or convicted law breaking, may vote for all legislative officers, for municipal officers and generally on all that concerns civic reform. The women have set to work very earnestly to understand their civic obligations and to perform that highest duty in a manner which will result for good to themselves and to their home surroundings. An impetus has been given to many projects which look to improving conditions, especially in the rural districts. I think I may say that in Norway at least, women have proved that to possess the ballot is to add to their usefulness in the community.

"I have been asked how much the influence of Ibsen has brought about this result of conferring suffrage on women, and I may reply that it was a powerful factor. The dramas of Ibsen not only worked an entire reformation in the handling of drama from the modern standpoint, but they revealed the folly of holding women in the irresponsible position assigned by the usage of the centuries. 'The Doll's House' worked a reformation in Norway as well as all over the world. Ibsen, I find, has a tremendous vogue in this country, and many American women who I have met are profoundly impressed by his philosophy. Norwegians are immensely proud of him, but we have many illustrious men of letters not so well known on this side of the water, and who I think deserve to be better known. But it is easy to comprehend the attraction of Ibsen since it touches so many vital points of national development along modern lines, especially where women feel the unrest which comes from ungratified ambition in becoming factors in their community.

"Life in Norway is along such simple lines that in the complex conditions which prevail almost everywhere else it is difficult to convey an adequate impression. There is no peasant class, for serfdom is unknown and titles of nobility were long ago abolished. The people, mostly agriculturists, enjoy a degree of liberty utterly unknown, even in republican countries: each small farmer reigns as king in his little domain. Industrial conditions are at present receiving an impetus, and before long the Norseland will compete with its sister nations in the industrial and commercial. On the sea the Norseman has long stood as a hero, and his exploits go back into the twilight of mythology. The people lead simple, uneventful lives, working hard at their labors and enjoying their sports and holidays with a degree of enthusiasm which is inspiring. The winter sports are famous, and have been made known to the world through the spirited accounts of noted travelers, and through the numerous novels dealing with Scandinavian life. But our summer life, which is just as delightful, is less familiar to the outside world. The brief summer, so much appreciated in the frozen zone, is spent almost entirely in the open. We have a summer home, called Villa Solvbronner, which means silver crown, about three hours on the steamer from Christiania, and every vacation which my husband can snatch, we hasten there. We delight in the garden, and take a special pride in our trees and flowers and the social intercourse, which adds so much to semi-rural conditions."

Mme. Gude has proved one of the most adaptable of foreign hostesses, and though she has been in this country only a year, she has already grasped the situation. During the past half-year she has been hampered somewhat in her social inclinations by the continued illness of her husband. M. Gude and his wife passed nearly six months in a local sanatorium, and though he derived much benefit from the treatment, he decided to spend the summer abroad, under the care of his physicians. They sailed on May 20, and will go first to Denmark, to visit his wife's mother. This distinguished lady lives in a fine old residence in Copenhagen, where the marriage of her daughter, Mlle. Elna de Stierholm and M. Ove Gude took place five years ago. It was in this mansion that Gen. De Stierholm lived during his long term as military governor of the royal princes of Denmark. During this time he trained the present King of Denmark, then Crown Prince, the King of Greece, and the young grandson of old King Christian, now the King of Norway, besides a long list of lesser celebrities allied to the royal house of Denmark, which rules in so many different countries. The intercourse between the royal family and their beloved military instructor was of the most cordial character, and the young Prince mingled freely with the brothers and sisters of Mme. Gude. They pay the greatest deference to the widow of Gen. De Stierholm, and visit her with punctilious care.

During the war with Prussia, in 1864, over the possession of Schleswig-Holstein, Gen. De Stierholm commanded the army of the defense, and his skill as a tactician is one of pride of his countrymen. He is honored as a hero in Denmark, and the greatest popular interest attaches to his children and grandchildren. His two sons are serving in the Danish army, and one is a captain in the Royal Guards. Mme. Gude has three married sisters, two in Holland and one in Copenhagen, and on her arrival in June there will be a family reunion in the old De Stierholm palace in Copenhagen. Mme. Gude is the second wife of the Norwegian minister, and there are three children by the first marriage. The oldest, a son named for his father, Ove Gude, is now in the Danish military service, and has recently been appointed to a post in the palace guard at Copenhagen. The two daughters of M. Gude, Tugeborg and Sigred, are studying in their native land, but they will return to this country in the autumn, and will be among the débutants of the coming season.

Both M. Gude and all his family, including the present Mme. Gude, are accomplished musicians. The minister has a splendid voice, and he cultivated it with the greatest care, with the end of adopting a musical career. But his father objected to such a profession notwithstanding the eminent talents displayed, and the minister and his wife took up diplomacy. Mme. Gude devoted many years to studying the violin, and she has attained a degree of proficiency rarely found in an amateur. She studied under the best masters in Copenhagen and Berlin, and one of her regrets is that social obligations have made impossible her daily practice. She hopes, however, that when the young daughters come to Washington that she will get more time for her music. They play both the piano and the stringed instruments, and both have unusually fine and well-cultivated voices. The minister and his wife are devoted to the old Norse music, and to that of Grieg, and they frequently play for their friends when they drop in informally in the evening.

The Gudes have brought with them the free, independent ways of their own land, and perhaps no diplomatist in Washington mingles as socially with his countrymen and with Washingtonians generally as they. Mme. Gude has called on all the Norwegian families in and around the capital, and she intends when her husband's health is more restored to visit the great centers where the Norse population predominates.

"Though I am Danish, I am devoted to Norway and all that pertains to it, for both Danes and Norse are of the Scandinavian stock, and they are closely akin. Almost all our national habits and traditions are similar, and our history is closely woven for centuries. The Norse people are among the most interesting in the world, and I wonder that Americans know so little of their folk-lore or of the works of these excellent authors, Asbjornsen and Moes, Hans Andersen, the beloved Danish writer, I find is as well known in this country as in my own. Hans Andersen's tales, delightful as they are, have not the value of Asbjornsen's and Moes, for the Dane's work is almost all fiction with a moral, while the Norse authors have written the tales which the peasants or country people tell themselves. They are quaint and most entertaining, these folk tales, filled with the dashing qualities of the old Viking legends, and replete with the superstitions which have been handed down from the prehistoric ages. The fairy tales are particularly light and winsome, and if one wants something really charming and inspiring, I can well recommend these stories from the Norseland."

The Minister and Mme. Gude, after passing a few weeks with Mme. De Stierholm in Copenhagen, will go to their country estate near Christiania and remain until the end of September. They hope to return with their two daughters in order to get comfortably settled in the Norwegian Legation before the "little season" sacred to the blossoming of the social buds begins in late November. The Norwegian Legation is at present at the Highlands, but the Minister hopes next year to have his flag floating over a domicile of his own on the western hills, where so many foreign establishments are now located.

Doubtful About the Powder.

One day, after listening to a story particularly offensive with age, Lincoln McConnell, the Georgia evangelist, told this:

An old darky went into a store down in Georgia and asked:

"Say, boss, you got any gunpowdah heah?"

"Yes, we have gunpowder."

"Lemme see some of that theah gunpowdah."

The dealer showed him some.

"Pore a little of that powdah in my hand."

The old darky took the powder near the light, ran his forefinger around and around in it, looked at it critically, and then smelled it two or three times.

"And you say this heah is powdah?"

"Yes," answered the dealer sharply; "that is powder. What is the matter with it?"

"Dunno, boss," the darky shook his head doubtfully, "but hit smells ter me like hit's done been shot off befoah."—[Judge

Ice Driver (from one of the "Orange Wagons:") Here is one of our Measuring Rules, Madam. By using it with the Table of Weights I'll leave you, you can check up the number of pounds of ice delivered.

Ice Customer (a new one:) Thank you! This is surely a most satisfactory kind of Ice Service!

It IS a "satisfactory ice service"—that furnished from the "Orange wagons."

We leave with every customer who wishes it one of our free Measuring Rules and Tables of Ice Weights. By using them our customers can tell the exact weight of ice delivered—easily and accurately—without bothering to weigh the ice.

This method enables you to check us up. We can guarantee you full weight ice. You can prove to your complete satisfaction that you are getting it.

Under former conditions you faced a question mark every time you looked at the block of ice the driver left you. You did not really know whether you got full weight or not—and very few people have scales suitable for ice-weighing in their homes—or even if they have, want to go to the trouble and bother of weighing up the ice.

It was a very unsatisfactory condition. We recognized it. For years we have tried to overcome it. Now we have succeeded.

The new service is most satisfactory in other ways, too. The old-time Ice Driver is a thing of the past so far as we are concerned.

You will find our new drivers courteous and accommodating. They are not like the drivers you had to put up with in former years. They have courteous, willing service for you, and not the "smart" talk and door-slamming of other days.

Make it a point to ask for the rule and table we mention—just telephone us. And let us serve you with ice. Our product is pure, delivery prompt and satisfactory, and full weight—don't forget that. Los Angeles Ice & Cold Storage Company. Home 10053, Sunset Main 8191.

APOSTOLIC SUCCESSION.

"WHAT do you think about apostolic succession?" said a layman to a clergyman. The reply was unusual. "I think it is something not worth talking about. If any one has any successors to the Apostles he need not advertise them. Trot them out. They will speak for themselves. By their works their right of succession will appear so plain that no person will question it. It need not be proclaimed. It will be an axiomatic truth, recognized on sight."

Judged by this rule, Los Angeles has a true successor to the Apostles. He has all the uncompromising sincerity of Peter, all the toilsome devotion of Paul, and all the ardor of John the Beloved.

For the full generation of men this modern apostle has worked in the vineyard, bearing the burden and heat of the day, no matter what the task, no matter what the heat. His long, faithful labor has been one of love. Not a cent of any man's money has touched his hand to pay him for his constant ministrations on Lord's Day or week day, and he has given much secular as well as sacred time to his work. "These hands have ministered to my necessities," was the defense made by Paul. The Los Angeles successor of the Apostle to the Gentiles could claim the same distinction.

Paul was a tentmaker, having learned the trade in his native city, Tarsus, the capital of Cilicia. Did you ever hear of a certain modern fabric of that name? It is an imitation of a weave made of goats' hair in the country of the Levant, which was noted for its herds of goats, and this hair cloth was used to cover tents. So Saul of Tarsus was naturally a tentmaker. Paul's successor here is a merchant and is as well known in a quiet way here for his business integrity as he is in the Christian church for his untiring zeal for his work in the ministry. He has been greatly prospered in business, and proves the truth of "Poor Richard's" maxim, "Honesty is the best policy." He gives thirty-six inches to every yard he sells, and when it is sold as silk, the genuine threads are there.

As his services in the sanctuary on Sunday are given to the cause of religion, so his wealth is held by him as a sacred trust. After more than thirty years of work as a pastor, given without money or price, on a recent Sunday, with the modesty of a child, with all the absence of ostentation that always marks deep sincerity, this modern apostle handed to the trustees of the congregation of which he is pastor a deed to the property on which he had built the church he preaches in, the ground and edifice by his gift as free as the ministrations the people have enjoyed so long. In the gathering this Sunday evening were trustees of four missions established by the successor to Paul, and to these were handed deeds to grounds and churches suitable to the needs of the different sections of the city where they are. These munificent liberalities were estimated by The Times as worth $150,000. The donor with characteristic modesty says the estimate is much too great.

The student of the life of St. Paul would tell you that when he made a tent the work was well done. Earnest zeal was the mark of the character of Saul of Tarsus as well as of Paul the Apostle. His tents were made of honest material, put together in a workmanlike manner. The Cilicia cloth which covered Saul's tents was made of goats' hair, not of perishable grass. His sermons were fearless, but were all Gospel. He says himself he knew nothing but Christ crucified as a theme for his discourses, and the subject was so broad, so various, so great, he found new matter for all his sermons in this one theme.

In both respects the Los Angeles apostle is a true successor of those who founded the church and broke down the kingdom of "sin, Satan and death" with the mighty weapon of the Cross. So in the church built and ministered in free of cost to the people by the modern apostle there is no sensationalism, no passing fad of the day, no clap-trap to tickle itching ears. The love of God is held up as the power which constrains men to goodness.

Week days in business there is no parade made of honest dealing, no raps aimed at the other fellow. As Paul made workmanlike tents as a matter of duty and fact, so the apostolic merchant always makes his business life conform closely to the principles he preaches on Sunday. Never for gain or advantage will he permit in his business any deviation from the principles he professes.

It is not because B. F. Coulter is an honest business man that these words are worth while. There are many honest men in business here. Nor is it because he is the only earnest, honest follower of the Apostles that these words are notable. There are many pulpits here where the Gospel is preached in sincerity. There are other merchants of whom words of approval might be said, and many pastors who merit all praise.

But this merchant-pastor may easily hold a lamp to business men in the world and to pastors in the church. His is a unique position to fill. He is truly in the world, but not of it. His brother merchants have not the reputation of a Christian minister to support, and his brother pastors have not the temptations of business life to combat. His free ministrations are unique in the religious world, and his liberality to the church is not usual on the part of business men.

But the real significance which it is sought to bring out here is that while some talk about being successors of the Apostles, this preacher of righteousness does his work in a truly primitive way and makes no claims. He need not. His work makes the claims and proves his right to claim the succession.

PATIENCE.

If the clouds hang dark and lowering,
And the sun is veiled from sight,
While your days seem filled with weariness,
The long, long nights with utter dreariness
And nothing goes just right,
Look within, the Mind's deep treasures
For you the brightest gems now hold;
Jewels rare, whose sparkling beauties
Radiant make life's dullest duties—
Duties turned to purest gold.

Flowers rise up where thorns annoyed you,
Birds now sing with liquid song;
All the crosses rise victorious
Which once for you were so laborious,
For night has conquered wrong.
Oh! heart, sing bravely, trusting ever,
When the road seems rugged, steep,
Just ahead a spring is bubbling,
The grass is green, the world stops troubling.
Our Father knows no sleep.

Sermons in Song..

Today and Forever

By Wilbur D. Nesbit

One generation passeth away, and another generation cometh; but the earth abideth forever.—Ecclesiastes i, 4.

Man builds a castle on a hill,
He makes a citadel or town
And ere the world may know his skill
Another comes to tear it down.
Yet day by day and year by year
Through all the changing centuries,
While men appear and reappear,
God paints His sunsets on the seas.

Not all the years the world has known
Have changed the pattern of the stars—
Though men in conflict for a throne
Have mapped the world with battle scars,
Though men in their own blinded way
Have grown confused of wrong and right,
God still gives them the golden day
And silent glory of the night.

He turns Time's record, page on page,
And writes his history the same,
While men blot out each bygone age
In mistiness of fading fame.
In countless numbers men arise
And try their weakness or their force,
Yet calmly through the endless skies
The earth holds its appointed course.

Man's dreams as deeds to him appear,
And, dreamlike, deeds and words are gone,
But day by day and year by year
We have the sunset and the dawn.
We never come to understand
The trenchant message brought by these—
God limns His sunrise on the land
And paints His sunsets on the seas.

LOVE.

Once I swung wide my own heart's doors,
To find a soft-eyed guest
Who, by some silent path, had come
And lodged within my breast.

Both red of lip and warm of gaze,
Caressing, lotus sweet,
The goddess, wanton, what you will,
Clung like a winding sheet.

But, ah! she brought red thoughts to vex,
And trains of rank desires!
My heart became a wretched thing
Consumed in leaping fires.

I bade her go! She looked on me,
My will went limp as water.
Her breath came sweet, and once again
To breast I caught her.

. . . . . .

With Reason's blade I wounded her,
And thrust her from my door.
But in my heart her stricken voice
Will echo ever more.

I rid my throbbing heart of her,
For white-souled Virtue's sake;
But ah! I know since she has gone,
That empty hearts can ache!

BESS MARJORY MUNN.

A Word of Warning.

"You never proposed to her on your knees!" cried the vetran married man in dismay.

"Sure I did; sure," the youth repeated, a glad proud light shining in his eyes.

"Well," said the veteran, "you'll regret it about twice a week for the rest of your life. After you get married, the slightest argument, the first impatient word, will cause your wife to say: 'You weren't like this when you went down on your knees and begged me, with tears in your eyes, to marry you.'

"It's pretty bad to have an angry wife read out your old love letters reproachfully," said the veteran; "but that is nothing to being reminded of your kneeling proposal every week till you are a great-grandfather."

"You proposed on your knees yourself?" the youth hazarded.

But the veteran frowned and made no reply.

The New Seoul. By Frank G. Carpenter.

THE CAPITAL OF KOREA.

HOW IT IS CHANGING UNDER JAPANESE RULE.

From Our Own Correspondent.

SEOUL (Korea) 1909.—I want to tell you what the Japanese are doing in Korea. They have taken the Hermit Kingdom by the neck, and are shaking its dry bones into action. They are establishing courts, abolishing squeezing and reorganizing the finances. They propose to build roads, to reforest the mountains, to open the mines and to turn this half-barren country into a garden. All these things are in their beginnings, but a start has been made and signs of progress are everywhere to be seen.

The capital, Seoul, is fast becoming a new city. When I came here twenty years ago the trip from the seaport, Chemulpo, took over twelve hours, and I had to have a pony and eight men to bring myself and wife to the walls. I rode the pony and the madame came in a chair, borne on the shoulders of four coolies, with a relay of four others to help them. Toward the end of the journey, we had to push on for fear we might not get to Seoul before the gates closed. The city is surrounded by a massive wall nine miles in length and thirty feet high. At that time, this wall was entered only by gates, and these were closed at night by heavy doors plated with iron, which were not opened again until the next day. We got in just in time to see the gates close. There was no hotel, and we had to be met by the soldiers of our legation, and were quartered there during our stay.

The city still has its walls, but the gates now stand open day and night, and an electric street car line runs through two of them and on out into the country. An electric-light globe prevents the closing of the one which we entered, and another gate has proved too small to accommodate the traffic, and has been cut out by the Japanese, wide roads being made through the walls on each side. The gate itself, which is a temple-like structure with a double roof of heavy tiles, has been faced with stone; and it is now proposed to put a commercial museum in the soldiers' guard room above it. In that old gate, all the industries of the new Korea will be shown side by side with those of other nations, and the people will thus be taught the various methods of manufacture and sale.

Signal Fires vs. Electricity.

As we came into Seoul that night, we could see the signal fires blazing on the mountains which surround the city, and were told that they were the last of the long series of watch fires built upon the hills of the other parts of Korea to notify the King that the country was quiet and all was at peace. Today there are watch fires no longer, but in their place Korea has its wireless telegraph stations and the capital is covered with telephone wires. One of the oldest buildings of the palace, in which the Emperor now lives, has been turned into a telephone booth, and Japanese hello girls sit there and take messages from all parts of the city. There are telegraph wires to every large village, with more than 2000 miles of line open, and cables across to Japan.

The old Seoul was pitch dark at night. The laws were that the ordinary man should not go about after dark, only officials and foreigners and their servants being permitted to do so. Women were never seen on the streets in the daytime, and the night was supposed to be their time for calling. When we went out we took the keso of the legation to carry our lantern, and this consisted of a framework, holding a candle with a red, white and blue gauze cloth thrown over it. The Seoul of today is fairly well lighted. Many of the stores keep open during the evening, and most of the houses have an oil lamp or an electric light globe at their ...nt gate. Looking down the wide main streets of ...city makes one think of one of the larger towns of our country, for the lights alone are to be seen, and the low one-story buildings are lost in the darkness.

Seoul has now an electric-car line run by Americans. It was put in long before the Japanese took hold of the government, and about half of the stock belongs to the retired Emperor, who has refused to sell out to the Japanese capitalists. The Koreans are now patronizing the road. At first they said it was magic, and a mob destroyed some of the cars. Their theory was that the line would prevent the spirits giving them rain. They said the cars were boats, and that the gods, looking down from the skies, seeing them swimming to and fro through the streets, would say: "These people need no rain, for their city is swimming in water."

A somewhat similar feeling prevailed as to the magic in the telephone and telegraph systems. Many of the Korean women, knowing that speech went over the wires, thought the poles must contain spirits and that the sound buzzing on the wires was their voices. Indeed, some said their prayers to the telephone poles at the time.

Chin-Go-Kai.

Have you ever heard of Chin-Go-Kai? It is a section of Seoul which contains 20,000 Japanese people. It has big official buildings, many two-story houses and long streets of stores, which would be a credit to Tokio. Some of the stores have plate-glass windows, and nearly all carry large stocks of goods. Here everything is clean. The roadways are swept, and most of them are as smooth as a floor. There are banks, brick school buildings, a postoffice and all sorts of business establishments.

At one side of this section is a great frame office structure devoted to the resident-general, who governs Korea, with the Emperor as the nominal head; and back of it is the home of this high official, with a thousand acres or more of Nam-San mountain about it. The old mountain had lain there a wilderness for thousands of years. It had seen the wall built more than 500 years ago, and had watched the generations rise and fall from then until now. It remained for the Japanese to make it a beautiful park. They have cut roads through the pines and have built many pavilions, until now it is one of nature's most beautifud gardens.

I had the good fortune to be invited to a garden party given there by the resident-general the other day. More than 2000 of the high-class Koreans and Japanese officials were present. His Excellency received us out in the open, and there were lunchrooms and tea houses throughout the grounds whose waiters were beautiful Japanese maidens. At the close we had dinner in a great tent, covering tables sufficient to seat the 2000 guests, and the Japanese military band sang a song composed by Viscount Sone in honor of the occasion.

Mud vs. Brick.

Twenty-five years ago there was not a brick in Korea. The houses were all made of mud, of wood or of stone piled up one on top of the other and covered with roofs of heavy black tiles, or straw thatch, held down with straw ropes. When I visited the city twenty years ago outside the homes of the missionaries and the palace of the King, there was not a two-story structure to be seen anywhere. The place contained two or three hundred thousand people, the most of whom lived in mud huts with roofs of straw thatch. The huts were all made in the shape of a horse shoe with quarters at the back for the women. There were larger houses roofed with tiles which formed the homes of the nobles, and these were shut off from the streets by low stable-like structures, in which the servants and retainers were quartered. The houses were all heated by flues which ran under the floors and emptied their smoke into the streets through openings cut at about the height of one's waist from the ground. At mealtimes, and more especially mornings and evenings, these holes poured forth volumes, making one think of a great forest fire. The air was so thick that one could almost cut it and the passer-by had to cough.

Today Seoul has thousands of similar houses. Of the 200,000-and-odd which make up the native population 99 per cent. live in such quarters. They have no sewers, and the slops run out into open ditches which have been cut through the streets. The Japanese have covered some of these ditches, and they are now putting in drains.

As to the buildings, a new class of structure is rapidly rising, and the people stand and gaze at them in open-mouthed wonder. The Young Men's Christian Association has just completed a brick home of two stories which is heated by steam. It is a wonder of wonders to the average Korean, who cannot tell whence comes the heat.

The bricks for that building are being made outside the city. Yards have been there constructed, which are now turning out bricks by the millions. The clay is excellent, and a large part of the new Seoul will be built of these bricks. There are other brickyards at Yong-San, the military city on the edge of Seoul, and there is no lack of fine building material.

The New Government Buildings.

Among the large buildings are many which are going up for the government. These are nominally Korean, but are really Japanese. The Cabinet ministers act as the nominal advisers to the Emperor, but under them are Japanese vice-ministers who really control and whose clerks are almost all Japanese.

Not far from where I am living in the foreign section of Seoul is the new Finance Department. This is a fine two-story brick structure covered with stucco. It is built on an elevation, overlooking the palace in which the retired Emperor lives, so that the clerks can see all that goes on inside the palace grounds. This is very offensive to His Majesty, who has always objected to any one looking over his walls, and has bought several foreign structures because they commanded such a view. He paid $200,000 for the French legation for this very reason, and he has, I am told, several times tried to buy the American consulate, which is on a hill, lower down. Some men have even bought lots and started buildings in order to make His Majesty buy them at high prices.

Another fine government building is that of the Supreme Court. This is somewhat similar to the structure of the Finance Department. It is situated on the main street, which runs between the east and west gates, and not far from a big two-story brick which is being built for a native Korean bank.

How the Officials Raised Money.

That bank, by the way, marks one of the most wonderful changes which is going on here. Until lately no Korean was supposed to have any right to money that the King was bound to respect. Every official squeezed the man below him, and if he did not give up a share of his goods upon demand, had him whipped or tortured in some way or other until he did so. The most common persuader was a flexible paddle about as wide as the palm of your hand, and ten or twelve feet in length. The man to be squeezed was stripped to the skin and laid face downward on the ground and held there by men, or he was tied to a bench so that it was impossible for him to move. Then the paddlers would strike him so many blows on the thighs. The second or third always brought blood, and a hundred was supposed to mean death. Burning and bone crushing were other methods of torture, and men were kept for years in prison on false charges as means of extortion. Under such conditions, the man who showed he had money was sure of persecution, and all loans were secretly made. The Japanese have done away with this squeezing, and the thousands of officials who lived upon it have now gone to the wall.

The New Currency.

The money is changed. During that trip across country to Seoul, I had to have an extra man to carry the money to pay the coolies at the end of the trip, and for my expenses in the capital. I got an order upon a merchant in Seoul. The coins were of copper with a square hole in the center, and it took 1000 of them to equal the value of an American dollar. They were strung upon strings of 100 each, and whenever I went out shopping I had to take a servant along to carry my purse. Such cash was in use here when I crossed Korea in 1894, and they continued for some time after the Japanese-Chinese war. Then the Korean nickel was made; but this was counterfeited both here and in Japan to such an extent that it fell to half its original value. The Japanese have now introduced their own coinage, accepting the Korean nickel at the market rate; and from now on, the country will be on a gold basis. Japanese bank notes are everywhere taken, and Japanese silver, nickel and copper coins are in common use. This reorganization of the finances has been one of the great problems that the Japanese have had to deal with, but the vice-Minister of Finance, Mr. Arai, tells me that it is now practically solved, and that he anticipates no further trouble. He says the government has lost money in taking the Korean nickels at half-rate and that the counterfeits they have had to accept have amounted to millions. They have already exchanged about 7,000,000 yen of them, the average nickel being worth something like three fiftieths of its value instead of the twenty-five fiftieths at which it is taken.

A Modern Banking System.

Mr. Arai has organized a banking system for Korea. The central treasury is now the Dai Ichi Bank, and there are in addition industrial banks which are loaning money against land to the farmers. They make long loans at 12 and 15 per cent. a year, which are considered especially low rates for Korea. These industrial banks have savings departments connected with them, and there are also postoffice savings banks, which have more than 1,400,000 yen on deposit. Many Koreans are putting their money into these banks, although the interest is comparatively low.

In addition to this, the government is now organizing a system of small capital associations. These will have a central head, with about 100 branches, and will issue small loans to petty farmers. The loans will be as low as $25, and may be secured by crops and chattel mortgages. All these things will tend to create thrift among the Koreans, which heretofore has been impossible on account of the squeezing and insecurity of all money.

Indeed, one of the common Korean banks of the past has been old Mother Earth, and this especially so during the winter. When a farmer sold his crops and wanted to keep the money over until spring, he would dig a pit six feet deep and four or more square, and at the first frost would put down a layer of cash and sprinkle earth and water over it. By morning it would be frozen stiff. The next night he would put down another layer of coins with mud on top. This would freeze, and so he would go until he had a block of frozen earth as hard as ice, filled with these coins at a thousand to the dollar. The work was done secretly, and the result was such that it would take days to recover the coins.

High Interest.

I am surprised at the enormous interest which the Koreans are paying. Loans on good security are made at from 2 to 5 per cent. a month, and the unscrupulous Japanese money lenders are getting much more. It is only fair to say that the natives do likewise. A common way of loaning on property is to hand over the deed to the house or lot in case the loan is not paid and as, until, now, there have been no means of registration, this means the transfer of the property. The Japanese should protect the Koreans as to such transactions. If they do not, all the lands and houses of the country will soon go into the hands of the former. The Koreans are great borrowers, and they cannot resist the money temptation. They do not think of pay day until it comes, and as a result are not able to meet their obligations.

A Nation of Children.

Indeed, it is up to the Japanese government to protect the Koreans from one class of its subjects who are now overrunning this country. The Koreans are a nation of children. They have been so ground down in the past that they have not learned to hustle and to look out for themselves. They are wonderfully gentle and trusting, and the shrewd Japanese can easily take advantage of them. He is doing so today, notwithstanding the government tries to prevent it, and the authorities should put on the screws and punish severely all such offenses. Prince Ito has tried to do this, even to the extent of sending back a large number of the Japanese who have come here, saying that they were not fit to be in the country.

It is this element that knocks the Korean about, cheats him out of his wages, and if possible, by means of loans, takes his houses and lands. It is the low-class element among the soldiers, scattered in small bands over the country away from their superior officers, which is leading to the killing of many innocent Koreans under the name of insurgents; and which, if the government does not pursue a more rigid policy, is likely to lose Japan its reputation as having the best, the kindest, the most refined and the most humane soldiers on earth. Indeed, it seems to me that Japan has in this low-class element which has come to Korea a problem far more serious than its people think. If Prince Ito could transmit to the Japanese in Korea the same feeling of brotherly love and charity which he and the better-class Japanese have, they would soon make the Koreans the strong friends of Japan, and build them up as an independent but powerful element for good in the Japanese empire.

Twelve-Year-Old Prodigy

MAURICE LAVALLARD THE HERO OF PARIS SALON.

By a Special Correspondent.

PARIS, April 23.—One of the most remarkable features of this year's salon is a picture by a boy who attained only his twelfth birthday last December. This is an event in the annals of French art, and, probably—though it is difficult to speak on the point with absolute certainty—no similar instance of precocity can be furnished by any other of the world's salons. A few years ago a lad named Henri Edouard Cortes secured an almost equally honorable success, but he fell short of the record now established by the 12-year-old Maurice Lavallard, the hero of the 1909 Salon des Artistes Francais.

Sir John Millais was considered a prodigy when he entered the portals of the Royal Academy at 17. So were Marcus Stone, Watts and Briton Rivière. Walter Crane was even admitted at 16. But the only English painter who really runs the French boy close was Sir Edwin Landseer, who was "hung" at 13.

Maurice Lavallard is a diminutive little fellow, with chestnut hair and blue eyes. He does not at all remind one of the traditional Wunderkind, now so common an apparition on the concert platform. He is merely a nice-looking boy. You would say he was intelligent, but he does not look a "genius." Nature seems to have been anxious to show us that in one instance, at least, genius may be located in an oridnary, every-day exterior, and that heredity is not essential to her purpose when she singles out from among us a being as the object of her especial favor.

Maurice is the son of a haberdasher in a small way of business in Paris. He was born December 4, 1896, in the industrial town of Douai, in the department of the Nord. His paternal grandfather was a country miller. On his mother's side he descends from ordinary Paris tradespeople. There is not a vestige of artistic heredity in his composition. Yet this child in spite of his inartistic forbears, at the age of 6 manifested an irresistible inclination for the pencil. He would draw any and every object within reach, boats especially. One day he begged his mother to give him a piece of canvas. This he stretched upon a rough frame. He then prepared this canvas by laying on a paste made of chalk and water and began to paint a boat thereon with cheap water colors given him by his father. But, alas! as soon as the paint had dried, the colors lost all their brilliance, and poor little Maurice was heartbroken. His parents comforted the baby artist by a present of oil colors, and the 8-year-old hopeful thereupon began to paint enlargements of the pictures in his school books.

His first canvas from nature was a bunch of pansies and forget-me-nots. At the age of 10, Maurice had a great joy: he was allowed to take drawing lessons once a fortnight! But the longing for color was irresistible. One day his master told him he might draw a landscape for him. The child painted one instead. In all, the boy has painted only a score of canvases, and yet he was very nearly received at the Salon last year with a picture showing the interior of a wash house with utensils. It was only rejected because the jury considered that it was rather a study than a picture in the strict sense of the term. This year the youthful artist astonished the jury with a chiaroscuro representing his little brother seated at the piano and entitled "L'heure d'étude" (study time.)

"Who is your favorite painter?" I asked yesterday. "Oh, Monsieur, I prefer Rembrandt to all others," was his reply, made without a moment's hesitation. "I love his 'Disciples of Emmaus' and 'The Philosopher.'" Both of these masterpieces are in the Louvre, and Maurice often goes to admire them, and Rembrandt's influence may already be detected in the efforts of the little artist to develop his figures in atmosphere. His great delight is to go to the Louvre, rather than to the modern gallery of the Luxembourg.

The eminent artist, M. Edward Detaille made a witty remark apropos of Maurice Lavallard, when he saw him and his picture. "Là va l'art" (Lavallard: "There goes art!") he exclaimed, and few will be inclined to disagree with him.

Defending Black Chief.

TWO WOMEN STRUGGLING WITH BRITISH GOVERNMENT.

From a Special Correspondent.

LONDON, May 13.—Two women in Natal are at present engaged in fighting the whole force of the British government. The battle waged by the Misses Colenso—two sisters—is carried on without visible signs of outward warfare; and yet it is a struggle as daring, as strenuous, and as adventurous as any real engagement. Embarked on a quixotic attempt to rescue the native chief Dinizulu, from the coils of British diplomacy, they have spent almost every cent they had in the world. For the last five years the elder sister, Harriet, has been the guide, philosopher and friend of the native chief; even going to St. Helena and staying there near him while he waited in prison until her efforts got him out; only to be tried and reconvicted on another count. The devotion of the Colenso sisters to the cause of the black chief has won the respect of even their inveterate enemies, the English foreign office wire pullers who wish to turn the land of Dinizulu over to white exploiters.

The Colenso Sisters.

In many quarters of the globe the fight waged by the Colenso sisters has evoked the sympathy of thousands of people who have not even stopped to consider the actual merits of Dinizulu's cause. Many influential English people, including Sir Charles Dilke, Lord Northbourne and Lady Schwann, have recently taken up the cudgels on behalf of the two brave women; and in London an organization has recently been formed to raise funds to restore to them some of the actual money they have spent in defending Dinizulu at his recent trial for alleged high treason. As a matter of fact, the only charge of which the black chief has been found guilty is harboring a few wretched natives fleeing from British rifles in a faked-up rebellion deliberately planned for the purpose of breaking down the influence of Dinizulu among the natives. The entire movement against Dinizulu is but an attempt on the part of the British to land-grab the countries belonging to the Zulu nation.

No white people in the whole of South Africa have greater knowledge and experience of the Natal natives than the two sisters. They are the daughters of the famous Bishop Colenso, first and last Bishop of Natal, who devoted his life to studying the needs and ministering to the spiritual wants of the black men.

Behind the whole Dinizulu prosecution, or rather, persecution, stands the fact that British colonists have always been jealous of his power and influence, and have adopted every subterfuge to rid themselves of the chief and to destroy his power. He has been twice tried for high treason; the first time when but a mere youth; and, lastly, for sheltering refugees during the so-called Zulu rebellion. In the earlier prosecution of Dinizulu the British magistrates had things all their own way. Dinizulu was for a long time unrepresented; and, after his first conviction, was sent into exile in St. Helena. It was then that Harriet Colenso began to take an active interest in his case. Without at first employing legal counsel she went into all the papers and convinced herself that all Dinizulu's so-called crimes were trumped-up charges for the express purpose of getting him out of Natal, where the natives look up to him as their great chief and the direct descendant of the famous Cetewayo.

Dinizulu's influence in the country has always been a stumbling block to British land grabbing; and it has been essential to remove him from the scene of his activities. After his liberation from St. Helena, Miss Colenso undertook his defense against the numerous other charges brought against him. She mastered all the native dialects in order to confront opposing witnesses; and her able cross-examination on many occasions utterly put to rout the emissaries of the government, who had come prepared to swear away the life of the native leader. Finding it necessary to have Dinizulu properly represented by counsel, Miss Colenso obtained from England some of the ablest lawyers, and paid all their expenses out to Natal in order to give the black chief the proper status before the white tribunal. In this supreme effort, she spent practically all she had in the world—about $15,000—but successfully demonstrated that the long list of alleged heinous crimes with which the chief was charged narrowed down to one of simply giving shelter and food for a few days to the wife and children of Bambata, a disaffected native chief. It was amply proved in Dinizulu's favor that he took no part whatever in any armed rebellion against the British, and that he did not even countenance the action of other native chiefs who wished to rid themselves of British oppression. And yet, on the mere charge of sheltering the women of a chief, he has been convicted of high treason against the English King; and condemned to four and one-half years of penal servitude, with the loss of his official position in Natal among his own people.

It is difficult to believe that the English could punish Dinizulu in this manner without cause; but even the judge's summing up in his condemnation proves the flimsy nature of the entire prosecution. The president of the court, Sir William Smith, in condemning Dinizulu for high treason, said, among other things:

"It can be said for you with regard to the one offense" (that is, giving food and shelter to refugees,) "that you gave no direct encouragement to these men—Mangati and Bambata—in continuing their rebellion, and, in my opinion, at no time did you attempt to take part in the rebellion; but people must understand that they cannot touch pitch without being defiled, and that they cannot offer assistance to the King's enemies and claim to be loyal."

Convinced that Dinizulu was perfectly innocent of all the charges brought against him, and fully seeing through the plan of the British government ultimately to annex Zululand, Miss Colenso left no stone unturned to block the game being played by the colonial authorities who represent England in Zululand. When Dinizulu was brought up for trial at Pietermaritzburg in 1907, it was thought that the government would have a walk-over, and convict Dinizulu simply out of the mouths of his own witnesses. Efforts were made to prevent Miss Colenso from helping him; but, overcoming all difficulties, she showed up at the last moment, and succeeded in confounding the witnesses of the opposition. In trying to get to Dinizulu on this occasion, she was refused passes through various parts of the country and martial law was proclaimed in order to hamper her movements. In addition to these official barriers, physical difficulties had to be overcome, for in one place a great river had overflowed its banks and so much delayed her progress that Miss C thought the case would be called before Dinizulu be properly represented. However, she managed to the river, and appeared in court on the day of the ing of the trial wearing her travel-stained costume huge rubber boots. Though utterly fatigued and out, she produced documents in court which bro about a stay of proceedings until she could procure quate legal representation. On this occasion, her amounted to more than $700, but she willingly adva it for the cause of the black chief. She won for D zulu a complete moral victory, but as convictions, justice, was sought, the chief stood no chance of liberated.

In order to obtain her evidence Miss Colenso vi personally, and spent days among the blacks, g into their secret hiding-places, and tracking down nesses. Her long residence in the country under roof of her father, Bishop Colenso, has given h minute knowledge of all native dialects, and, by ceaseless efforts she has managed to obtain inform of a peculiar character that she employed to the vantage of the prisoner whose welfare she has h heart. She spent days near the prison of Dinizulu h self; and, when permitted by the prison authori taught him sufficient English for him to understand nature of the charges brought against him. Gov ment officials at first denied Miss Colenso all acce her protegé. After she had taken legal measures compel them to permit Dinizulu to see his own la a regulation was passed that no interview, either his legal counsel or Miss Colenso, was to last for than twenty minutes at a time. As the English la who represented Dinizulu could not speak the na language, every word had to be translated by Miss lenso and every question put through her interp tion. This process was extremely slow, and the tw minutes often slipped by without the chief having able to make the necessary points needful for his d defense.

A matter of fact her hands were actually strengthe for she thus obtained ample evidence to prove that whole method of conducting Dinizulu's trial was as fair one. harsh measures in order to manufacture evidence against the prisoner. Natives were rounded up into compounds and put through a species of "third degree." Evidence was obtained by means of the lash in many instances; and Miss Colenso has recently discovered that various forms of torture were resorted to in order to make native witnesses give false evidence against the chief.

When these natives came into court, Miss Colenso cross-examined them in such a way that in many cases startling revelations were made as to the manner in which they had been treated in order to obtain their evidence. By skillful cross-examination, she made most of these witnesses contradict themselves again and again. In an ordinary court of law their evidence would have been utterly discredited; but before a tribunal purposely summoned to bring a conviction this native evidence was accepted; and, of course, the condemnation of Dinizulu followed as a natural consequence.

Not only did Miss Colenso bear the entire expense of Dinizulu's defense in his last trial out of her own pocket, but she paid various fines imposed upon Dinizulu in other and earlier trials. One of these amounted to $100—a huge sum for a native to pay, considering that there is very little actual money in the country. An idea of the scarcity of money may be gathered from the fact that the total sum collected in money from an entire district in Natal was two half-crown pieces, amounting in American money to about 60 cents. Miss Colenso also expended large sums of money in seeking out witnesses, and keeping them near at hand while waiting for the trial to come off. She formed various camps of her own, into which native witnesses—in many cases consisting of entire families—were rounded up and kept for weeks at a time. She lived in these camps with the natives, cooked for them, amused them, and succeeded in keeping them faithful to her interests, despite the attempts made by the government to get rid of them in various ways, mostly by bribery, or sending them away under the mandates of martial law.

The natives of Natal have come in time to adore Miss Colenso and her sister, and to realize that they are spending their all in trying to rescue Dinizulu from his persecutors. Native Natalians look upon Dinizulu as their great leader, and, when he occupied an important post under the British government, the country was in a state of almost absolute peace. With the exception of one or two unimportant disputes there was no trouble with the natives. Dinizulu kept them in peace; but at the same time he guaranteed to them a certain amount of freedom and autonomy. Feeling that their liberties were safe under his rulership, the natives reposed confidence in the British government, whose deputy Dinizulu then was. The English residents in the country, however—and particularly that class who look upon Zululand as a legitimate field for white exploitation—became dissatisfied with the leadership of Dinizulu. They want the blacks driven out or reduced to the position of serfs; and particularly they wish to break up the system of land ownership by which the natives hold all property in common. This system prevents the private monopoly of lands in the hands of white traders, and gives the natives an independence which enables them to defy the efforts to make them the slaves of the whites.

Dinizulu, while serving the British well, always refused to hand over his people into slavery; and for this reason the local government authorities began their series of persecutions in order to rid themselves of his rule. This they have effectually done, so that, at last, Dinizulu is locked up in prison, and his leadership of the people has been forever taken away from him. He has been deprived of the right of holding any official position under the British government, and, by removing him from the scene of his activities, the government hopes that the natives will in time forget their great chief who stood between their liberty and the British slavery which trades under the euphonious name of colonization.

The downfall of Dinizulu has not been accomplished, however, without the vigorous protests of the Misses Colenso, and their activities have brought fruit in the formation of a strong anti-government party in London, headed by some of the most influential British persons who have resolved to see that justice is done to Dinizulu, or, if this is impossible of accomplishment, to bring home to its perpetrators the conspiracy which has been deliberately fomented against native freedom in Zululand.

Lady Schwann, who has charge of the fund which is being raised to place the Misses Colenso on their feet again, recently said to me:

"Though we have only been collecting money for the Misses Colenso a few weeks, the fund already reaches more than $5000. We are receiving subscriptions from many parts of the globe, the money coming in sums ranging from $1 to $500. Hundreds of letters reach me daily testifying to the honor and great admiration in which the Misses Colenso are held. While we recognize that it would be impossible to replace even a modest part of the income which these ladies have expended, we hope to raise about $15,000 which will provide them with an annuity. It has been through the magnificent efforts of these two sisters that of all the charges brought against Dinizulu, every one has fallen through except the so-called crime of giving shelter to refugees flying from their pursuers under circumstances which—such as the case of the wife of Bambata—entitled Dinizulu to give to them every protection under the dictates of common humanity."

THE HOTEL CLERK DISCOURSES ON THE CHIN WHISKER.

By a Special Contributor.

"LARRY," said the Hotel Clerk of the St. Reckless to his regular audience, the House Detective, "have you ever thought of growing whiskers?"

The House Detective caressed a square and blue shaven jowl. "I have not," he said with emphasis. "Well, don't do it," said the Hotel Clerk, "especially the kind known as the chin whisker. It's not being worn by our swellest dressers this season. And besides, I think it's bad luck."

"Wot put that idea into your head?" inquired the House Detective.

"The sad cases of two old friends of mine," said the Hotel Clerk. "I never exactly met them face to face, but I've heard so much about them that I feel just the same as if we'd all three been raised on the same block. Both of them had those chin whiskers, one set being of the trailing love-vine variety and the other the closely-woven winter lichens, and both of them have been getting the hooks. It only goes to show that if a man wears the chinille fringes of a male Angora on the southern division of his face long enough the populace will take the hint and make a goat out of him. I refer to Abdul Hamid, better known lately as Ab the Ham, and Cipriano P. J. Castro, late of Venzwalla.

"Even in their most pammy days I couldn't figure out where either one of them had much the best of it. Cip, the last time he took the census, had twenty-five grown children and a flock of little Cips coming on, and Ab was incumbered with a harum full of lady harum-scarums, who wore nose bags over their faces and dressed like the hind legs of a property elephant in a Christmas pantomime. And on top of all that, along came old Miss Trouble and put both of them on a through freight. At last accounts Cip was being kept so on the move by the police that he rarely spent two nights on the same park bench. He was about as popular as a haunted house. And lonely—well, they'd taken to calling him Poor Old Robinson Castro, and that ought to give you an idea.

"But what Cip got wasn't a whiff to what they handed poor Ab, over in Turkey. He certainly had the Allah pazazz passed to him. You see, they're almost as many different sorts of true believers in Turkey as there are in the Democratic party, and they don't get along any better, either. There's the Armenians from whom we get our rugs, or would do so, if most of them were not made in New Jersey; the Circassian, from whom we get those pink-eyed ladies with the lamp-cleaner heads of hair that used to be in all the side shows, but are now remaining at home and furnishing raw material for the massacre stuff; the Curd, who is the real cheese, as indicated by the name; the Mohammedan, sometimes called the Mussulman, hence the muscle dance; and others too numerous and too hard to mention.

"It seems they got a constitution in Turkey last fall and weren't acclimated to it, and didn't know how to take liberties with it, as our Congress does, and it went to their heads and brought on trouble. The Young Turks and the Young Corbetts of the country got together, and as a preliminary, killed off some Christians and passed a set of resolutions saying that whereas the sacred name of liberty had been outraged, and whereas the Christians were reported as plentiful and comparatively tame in several provinces, and whereas the interests of advanced civilization could best be conserved by killing some Christians; therefore, be it resolved that we do now proceed to stand the present Sultan on his esteemed pecan, and kill some Christians. No sooner said than done. The Young Turks marched on the imperial establishment, pausing only to kill some Christians from time to time, and deposed the Sultan, after killing some Christians, and sent him into retirement at Salonica, accompanied only by enough wives to make four tables at bridge; first, however, taking care to kill some Christians; after which all hands engaged in a favorite national pastime called killing some Christians, a pleasant time being had by all, and the best of order was maintained.

"The Turk may be a great fighter all right, Larry, but at this distance he looks to me like a percentage player. He'd give the other fellow all the advantage that is accorded a circus grafter who's been caught working the shells on the town marshal's favorite nephew in a small, rural community in the Panhandle of Texas; but not any more than that. He doesn't seem to think so very much of Christians since he licked the Greeks that time. Well, I haven't heard of any heavy-weight champion that came from Greece myself. It seems the Greek was in the habit of spending the night before the battle going around singing the national hymn and copiously kissing his comrades, his military uniform consisting largely of an accordion-plaited walking skirt, an Eton jacket and a clarinet player's lid. For dress occasions he added a lingerie shirt waist and probably carried violets. When he fared forth to conflict, he must have looked like a cross between a Mystic Shriner and a serpentine dancer. Why, his regalia had him handicapped before he started.

"But the Turk didn't sing any, that I ever heard of, on the night before the battle. He hasn't any singing voice to speak of, anyhow. But he put in a congenial evening spitting on his hands and whetting up his portable cutlery, and the next day many sudden vacancies occurred in the push cart and terra cotta bust industries, and the passes of the mountains were full of Greek volunteers hunting for home or a hollow tree. I trace the present revival of interest in Greek Marathon racing right back to that war. But sometimes I wish the Turk might run up against some other Christian bodies that I could name; I'm thinking particularly of our police force.

"But I was getting away from our real subject, which is the whisker. You'll take notice from their pictures, Larry, that both Cip and Ab wore whiskers. And now, just look at them. When the populace begin to go after whiskers in high places, it's time for royalty to have a care. If I was King Leopold of Belgium, I bet I'd have a care. I'd have a care if I was him, and then I'd have a shave. In some places I know, the whiskers he wears would bring on a riot, if a circuit rider had 'em, let alone a king and a close business friend of Thomas F. Ryan.

"Some of these days, Larry, some historian that has more time to spare than I have, will trace the influence of the chin whisker upon our own public life, starting from Capt. John Smith, who was considerable of a Living Life Net himself, if you can believe the pictures of him, and running right down to Gov. Hughes. Who was it that snatched the country out of the greedy grip of the Perfidious Albinos of Perfidious Albion, as the poet says, and built it up into a collection of states, most of which would eventually go Republican by large majorities, and have conflicting rate laws? Who, I ask, but a lot of persons like Patrick Henry and John Quincy and B. Franklin, and all of them as bare on the face as a newel post. If the postage stamps tell the truth, there wasn't a one of them had a whisker to his name. When Washington crossed on the ice, thereby beating Eliza to it by seventy years, there were fourteen soldiers in the same nine-foot rowboat with him, all with bloody bandages around their heads, but, according to the chromo that used to hang over our parlor mantel, and everybody else's parlor mantel, for that matter, every blessed one of them had just come from the barber's with his bay rum, his German cologne and his talcum powder fresh upon him. 'Put none but smooth-faced Americans on guard tonight,' said somebody just before the battle of something, and they had to do it. They didn't have any other kind in stock. And through that awful winter at Valley Forge the patriots may have had no shoes for their feet, but they all had the price of a clean shave, twice over, with the tonic rubbed well into the scalp to prevent falling out and baldness. See any American art collection.

"We got along very well through the days of Webster and Clay and Calhoun and other smooth-faced statesmen, but along about the middle of the last century a wave of whiskers swept through the unhappy country and what was the result? Why, the country split up so fine that it took four years of fighting to get the scraps reassembled.

"Yes, Larry, North and South, the youth and chivalry of the land succumbed to the infuriating chin whisker, and ere long the Southern Similaxes and the Spanish Mosses of Dixieland were at the throats of the Trailing Arbutuses and the Human Honeysuckle Arbors of the North, and vice versa. Look at any daguerrotype dating back to those dear old haired-over days of 1850, and see if I'm not right. The classiest dresser of that period was the party who could sprout himself into the closest imitation of an impenetrable forest, seen through a heavy drizzle of brilliantine. Peace was never restored to our distracted land until the bayonet wore out and the razor again came into its own.

"Since then, inch by inch, we've been driving the chin whisker back to its lair. It's still flaunting itself in communities where people eat their scrambled eggs for breakfast with a hurried overhand stroke, and want to save the shirt front, and where the necktie is yet regarded as an expensive luxury. But in the great centers of civilization we've got it on the run, for no matter what others may say, I would attribute the downfall of Cip and Ab to popular displeasure with the way they garnished their respective entrees.

"But what looks to me like the surest sign of its doom is the fact that the chin whisker has got to be comedy stuff. Some people think a pair of white spats worn by the Family Lawyer are the most comical thing known, and some insist that there's no comedy value like a red bandanna handkerchief pinned to the coat tails of an eccentric rube character; but the best authorities on the drama are beginning to agree that for sure fire comedy, the chin whisker, particularly the magenta or cerese whisker, is even more humorous than a line about Oshkosh or Kalamazoo, and has always been regarded as the funniest there is.

"So now, when no up-to-date comedy production is complete without its set of pink chin whiskers, I look to see the whisker disappear from everyday life altogether."

"Why so?" asked the House Detective.

"Because," said the Hotel Clerk, "I notice when a thing gets very common on the stage it ceases to be common anywhere else."

Fishing With Baskets.

"I have often fished," said the angler, as he put on a fresh worm, "with hammers and with ducks, but till I visited the Euphrates, I had never fished with baskets. It's not bad sport.

"The Euphrates is a tidal river, with a good many narrow offshoots. These offshoots fill up at flood, when the natives close their mouths with reed lattices. Then, at ebb, they empty, but the fish that entered them with the rising water can't depart. They remain, buried in the mud.

"Now is your time. You wade these empty channels with a dome-shaped invested basket with a circular hole in the top. Every little while you plant your basket down on to a projection in the mud, and if there is a fish inside it, you put your arm through the hole in the top and take him out.

"I have caught as many as thirty fish in two hours' basket fishing."

The Colorado Delta.

Noted Scientist Writes of This Marvelous Region.

BOUNDLESS FERTILITY OF SOIL—DELTA UNIQUE IN THE METHOD OF ITS FORMATION—THE VOLCANOES AND VOLCANO LAKE—GEOLOGIC HISTORY OF THE REGION.

By a Special Contributor.

THE following letter written by Prof. G. W. Edmond, formerly of Johns Hopkins University, but now conducting an extended scientific expedition engaged in exploring and gathering data relating to the geology of Lower California, is of especial interest because of the authoritative character of the information it gives relative to a region of unique geological formation and of marvelous fertility lying at the very border of Southern California and yet to most Californians an unknown country.

The letter is dated at Poso Vicente, Lower California, April 30. After mentioning delays attendant upon this preparation to start on his expedition into the interior of Lower California, he says:

The various delays cannot be regretted, as thus the opportunity has been given to see and consider more fully than otherwise some of the remarkable features of this unique region.

But the first impression of boundless productivity in a soil so fine, so deep, so uniform (although compounded of material so various from so vast a basin) under a sky transmitting undiminished such incalculable stores of solar energy, while the great river brings with its abundant waters the rich sediments, which more than renew its strength and fertility—this first impression of boundless productive power remains the dominant one, as more and more of the incomparable delta expanse is visited.

Where else in the world has a river of the first importance built its delta across the domain of the sea, damming it out and using the territory so acquired for the storage of its surplus floods? It is as if the Nile were to close temporarily the easterly streams of its delta, push out its mole north and west until it reached the shores of Asia Minor, and then unsealing its easterly mouths, convert the eastern Mediterranean into a great fresh-water lake. But a stupendous engineering feat of this kind the Colorado has accomplished.

Slowly through patient centuries the grist of the Rockies of the Wahsatch, of the mountains of Arizona and Northern Sonora has been ground to dust, to the finest silt, and laid down under the waters of the gulf. Slowly the great mole, a hundred miles broad and seemingly level, was pushed southwesterly until the deep trough of the gulf was traversed and the peninsular ranges reached. Meanwhile what wild contention between sea and river for this debatable land as the high, rushing tides of the gulf, balked by sun and moon and favoring gales, burst across the rising barrier to their old domain in the Salton Sink. The contour lines of the region seem to record something of this for the low flat saddle of the delta divide separates the waters of the gulf from the Salton Sink by an altitude less than forty feet at its maximum. The slow upward buckling of the land over a wide area was an important factor in the process, for remnants of an old shore line are found for long distances near the fifty-foot contour, and at San Felipe Bay, 100 miles south, on the west coast of the gulf, we saw parallel to the present beach and 500 feet back of it, a raised beach, sixty feet above sea level, and full of the same shells as those covering the shore at present, the shells being scarcely more weathered than those on the present beach.

At all events the work of the river has prevailed, and only at new moon the high tides of the gulf rush up the channel of the Colorado in a dangerous bore, or at the season of inundating in the lower delta, force back its waters and those of the Hardy with their interlacing streams, and prolong and extend the work of the annual overflow. Here, then, is a vast expanse of land, teeming with productive energy, such as cannot be paralleled in North America, built and won from the sea by the mighty Colorado and still held and dominated by the river in its mad, tumultuous hours. But now there appears in this desert land (so called, where the problem has lately been not so much to bring the water on as to keep it off) a novel agent—civilized man. Brains, courage, capital, drafting to its service science and skill, undertake to control and utilize the river throughout all its infinitely varying moods and conditions, in a struggle which fires the imagination and is destined to be a historic achievement.

For the day of the Cocopa is over; of the tribe that has lived for generations on the fattest of its lands and has asked of the great stream only a few acres of melons and maize, in the short weeks immediately following the overflow. This present season the remnants of the tribe, owing to a restricted inundating last year, are reported to be getting food mainly from the pinole or meal of the indigenous mesquite bean, ground in their stone metates.

Thirty-five years ago, we looked down from the divide of the San Diego Mountains, near the old Fort Yuma road, into this region, and saw only a dazzling realm of desolation, the blazing furnace of the dreaded desert of the Colorado. And when a few weeks ago we saw for the first time, these thousands of acres of alfalfa, great herds of cattle, magnificent horses and the first fruits of the orange and the vine in this land of the Cocopas, we beheld, as in a picture, the abyss which separates the industry and intelligence of civilized man from the sloth and ineptitude of the savage. A triangle, widely equilateral, embraces the southern, Mexican half of this unique delta country, exceeding fifty miles to the side. We have, then, the international boundary for the base, the Cocopa range bearing southeasterly to the west, and the Colorado flowing to the west of south, as the eastern side of the tract. Pilot Knob marks the northeast corner, Signal Mountain the northwestern, and the mouth of the Colorado the southward pointing apex, a magnificent expanse of a million or more acres. As one looks from Calexico, at the international boundary line to the south and east no barrier interrupts his vision; the rich levels stretch on and on, uninterruptedly, like the surface of the sea from which they have lately risen. To the southwest the near range of the Cocopas, mainly of granite, ash-pink in the morning light, but lifting on its flanks at either extremity large areas of dark metamorphic rock, close in the view. The waste slopes of this range made up of sharp granitic sand, descend rapidly, as a narrow belt, and the wide slowly-changing levels of the delta silt. As one crosses their line of contact he is struck by the abrupt change in vegetation. On the delta soil no cactus is found, no palo duro, no palo verde, no mague, no hojatilla; those most characteristic shrubs of the Mexican desert are lacking, but once across this line, which demarcates a difference of soil only, and not of climate or altitude, we find in abundance seven or eight varieties of the cholla, the visnaga, the magueyand all the other weird and beautiful desert species named above. Looking again from Calexico to the south, one sees, twenty-five miles away and somewhat east of Borrego Peak, the highest point of the Cocopa (3500 feet,) the low, black triple crown of the Cerro Prieto, or Black Butte (750 feet.)

horizon marks a locality of limited area, which contrasts strangely with the granitic waste of the abrupt detrital slopes of the Cocopa, and with the mellow richness of the spreading delta which surrounds it. It is the location of the Volcano Lake, the mud volcanoes, the deposits of sulphur, alum, and other non-metallic minerals. This tract is a narrow one, scarcely more than a mile in breadth and running southeasterly, perhaps six miles, in parallel direction to the fundamental lines of fissuring and dislocating, which determine the geological architecture of the southwest as a whole. Perhaps the most important feature of the strip, to be noted for its bearing upon the interpretation of the phenomena found here, is that, from one end to the other, from the Cerro Prieto to the crossing of the Hardy, there are outcroppings of low reefs of sandstone, and it is the only area in this portion of the delta where we have encountered them.

It is probable that these mark a line of weakness, of fissuring, and subsidence on the eastern side, in the underlying, rocky crust. Let us glance first at the Cerro Prieto, at the northern end of the tract. This dark hill with its three summits we found to consist of lavas of at least two periods of eruption, weathering to dusky brown and black. At a distance, we had thought of this mash as, perhaps, having built itself up from the flow of the gulf before the formation of the delta and consequently as having the greater part of its bulk below the present level surface, resting on the old sea bottom. However, closer inspection in the gulches which indent its outline showed that this volcanic mass rests upon a platform of soft, late sandstone rising a hundred feet or more above the delta level. This soft sandstone, then, although the latest in this series of outcroppings, is prior in time to the delta formation. On the other hand, the latest eruption of the lava hill, which was explosive in character, scattered its cindery fragments over the surface of sandstone and delta silt alike, for a distance of a mile or more from the butte, showing this youngest, cindery lava to be later than the delta formation even in its late phases. In fact, the low, smooth hills of unconsolidated clay and sand, which immediately surround the butte, show scarcely any change of contour since they were covered with the cindery mantle. Only in a few places along the shallow arroyos which divide them, where occasional rains have fed a short-lived stream, we find them shaved away to a precipitous bank a few feet within the former outline of the slope.

Also, the hills of drifted sand, heaped against the westerly side of the butte by the prevailing winds, and also thinly covered by this late cindery shower, still look as if they had been sprinkled but yesterday. In a few small spots only has the wind covered this dark mantle with the yellow desert sand. Everything indicates the recency of this small explosive outburst, and it seemed possible that some tradition of it might survive among the Cocopas. So far, however, we have not succeeded in getting report of it. The middle of the three summits of the butte we climbed first and found it surmounted by a signal pole bearing the name of Mr. Bassett of the Southern Pacific survey. This summit is lower than the western, the highest by about 100 feet. In contrast to the rest of the butte it has some grass and is dotted with a shrub bearing a small red berry of very pleasant, slightly acid flavor, decidedly refreshing in the absence of drinking water. But this same berry on the low levels we found bitter and unpalatable. A little north of the signal pole, on some of the larger blocks of lava, we found Indian picture writing such as we had seen far to the south in the Arroyo Grande and other desert cañons of the peninsula. The rings and broad-spoked wheels, the dumbbells with and without central dots, and other more complex forms which curiously remind one of the diagrams of the botanist illustrating cell growth and division, or which look like the efforts of some untutored anatomist to depict the skeletons of various vertebrates.

The surprise of the summit, however, was this, that we found it to be the highest projecting point in the rim of an unbroken crater which gives no hint of its existence, as you look at the butte from the base. The third summit, a half-mile to the east, is a similar point in the same continuous rim. The walls of the crater slope from every part of the rim evenly inward, to a level circular playa of hard clay, the residuum of the rock decay and wash, which seals up the former orifice and is, by pacing, 750 feet in diameter and in altitude some 200 feet lower than the higher portions of its rim. A lively gale was blowing outside at the time, but within all was quiet, and at noon, April 23, the dry bulb of the thermometer registered 74 degrees F., and the wet one 62 degrees.

On the smooth playa floor, we found evidence of its attractions for much later human visitors than the pictographers of the summit, for here are neatly blocked out in fragments and cinders two musical Spanish names under date of 4, 11, 1909. But now as regards the bearing of the pictographs on the date of the last eruption and vice versa. These peninsula inscriptions are thought by some to be the work of older races than those now occupying the regions. Aside from this, the lava, which bears them here, is the older lava of the hill, and they may have been engraved upon it before the late, cindery outburst, so that their antiquity may be considerable.

It would be interesting if geological evidence giving an approximate measure of the time intervening between the earlier and later eruption could be clearly made out and thus place an upper limit to the possible antiquity of these rude stone records. The only clew yet observed by us consists in the fact that the various hills both of hard, older, sandstones and later unconsolidated material, which surround the Black Butte, seem to have received their sculpture and contour by erosion, as shaped by the prior existence of the main volcanic mass of the hill. In such case the period separating the dates of the two eruptions would be measured by the time required to accomplish this erosion. The erosive activities of the desert, however, are an exceedingly variable quantity, the brief cannonade and cloudburst of the summer tempest often effecting more in a few hours than the scanty ordinary rains of a generation. The lava of the older outflow which makes up the main mass of the hill, is less porous than the later, and would be classed as a felsite of moderate acidity, the significance of which for our present purpose is that it possessed little liquidity, did not spread easily, but broke up into large, angular masses with steep grades, covering a small area, scarcely a mile in length from east to west, and one-half a mile from north to south.

Turning now from this interesting but rather Lilliputian display of volcanic energy in the past to the remnants of its vitality still in evidence to the southward, we found in the area of older sandstones below the butte, two beds, the upper dark, hard, nodular, as if weathered by the brine, resting unconformably upon an older, softer, buff formation. These outcrops are possibly of Pliocene age, but a diligent search for fossils revealed none. But at various spots in the middle of these hard resistant ledges were found circular, sunken areas of decomposed rock, consisting of white, bleached sand grains, and impregnated with alum, sulphur, gypsum, acids of sulphur, and the like. These spots were from fifty to a hundred feet, and sometimes much more in diameter, especially at the southern part of the tract, and immediately below the surface were commonly moist and very hot. A mass of molten rock, far below the surface, which had found vent in the volcanic hill, and thereafter sealed itself, still continues to heat the overlying formations and their contained moisture, along the line of fracture and outcrop of the sandstones, sending up hot vapors through the joint cracks and fissures, dissolving, disintegrating, compounding and recompounding the original and upgathered material, until nothing remains of the original rock except the resistant quartz sand, bleached to a sugary whiteness and impregnated with all the resultant compounds, sulphur, alum, etc. In the first stages of this process the vapors come up through firm, clear-cut fissures in the rock.

Examples of this early stage of the process are found near the volcano lake where considerable volumes of steam escape from openings in the sandstone at certain points. Later on, a large area around the vent will disintegrate to sand, sink together, become impregnated with the chemical deposits, and by its weight shut out the escape of the upward pressing vapor, compelling it to seek other vents. When the rock disintegrates more largely to clayey or muddy residues, a second form of this solfataric action is found—the so-called mud volcano. By disintegration around the original rock vent, a sunken area of more plastic, cohesive material is formed, acting in a valvular manner, allowing spasmodic escape of the vapors, with upthrow of portions of the mud and formation of low funnels or cones, of a few feet in width and height. The final stage of this class of vents is the circular sunken pool of mud, allowing a few bubbles of steam, or finally of carbonic acid, to escape, the temperature running down through successive stages of decrepitude from boiling to 75 degrees F. Around the more active vents of this description booths are sometimes built for hot vapor baths, and around the more gentle, excavations are made for hot mud baths, the heat, the absorptive power of the mud, the healing quality of the dissolved salts and perhaps the astringent property of the alum, uniting to produce great benefit in diseases of the skin, and rheumatism of extreme type is said to be also greatly benefited.

This fumarolic or solfataric tract of which we are speaking lies west, and along the western margin, of an extensive, imperfectly-drained, shallow basin which is half playa, half intermittent lagoon, and is called the Volcano Lake. It is a meeting-place for many of the overflow channels of the Colorado which lie to the south of the delta divide, if one can speak of a divide in this great tract so level to the eye, and in much of its area, changing its contour by a few feet or less to the mile.

This divide or axis of the imperceptibly descending delta plain runs southeast from the Colorado, below the intake of the Alamo, to the Cerro Prieto and an overflow to the south of this line tends to concentrate for a time in the playa, and the winds and wave action resulting, have established a series of low, coalescent shore lines which represent the varying levels of different inundations. The Hardy and its sloughs, for the most part, lead in this playa, or lagoon, and finally drain off the most of its area to the gulf. But the surface is not that of a playa; instead of the hard, smooth capping of clay and alkali, we have thousands of acres of rich, brown, mellow soil, and only in a few spots where the water dries off, instead of draining, do we get the playa alkali. This playa, or dry lagoon, presents a strange and fascinating picture, level, without vegetation of any kind, owing to the long-standing inundations of late years, rimmed in the distance by rich growths of mesquite and cottonwood. The mesquite now is in fresh verdure and full of its long, close clusters of fine, yellow blossoms, equals in feathery grace and rich color the beauty of the finest exotic acacias. And all the hours of daylight, here and there over this wide vista, plays the witchery of the shifting mirage, and the long, blue ribbons of shining water, topped with lines of plumage green, charm and beckon from a distance, dim and aërial.

At the western edge of this laguna basin, nowadays, is the deepest portion, a depression perhaps a thousand feet in length and a few hundred wide, permanently filled with water, at this season fed only by springs, and draining by a slow, slender stream to the Hardy. The water is dark, opaque, from the sulphurous slimes and mud of its shores and bottom. Along its eastern and western margin, low reefs of sandstone, discolored by the sulphurous vapors, give vent to the hissing, bellowing steam and gases. These reefs of stone were probably at one time solid, continuous rock across the space now occupied by the black pool and its lesser brethren, the areas of mud volcanoes and boiling springs, of circular, sunken spaces of alum and brimstone; and the remnants of solid rock are fast being eaten from beneath the feet of those who frequent the fascinating spot. This black pool is the volcano lake proper, which we had heard of as possessing great, indeed unknown, depth; 1600 feet of line, 2600 feet had been dropped without reaching bottom. We had looked to find it inclosed with volcanic rock, and occupying the deep orifice of some crater from which the final lava plug had subsided to unknown levels. But the spot is six miles to the south of the Black Butte, and no volcanic rock between. The slender channel draining it to the Hardy is now insufficient for a boat, and one could not be brought at once from the river. Later, by the kindness of some of the C. & M. men, one was brought, and with our thermometer, a weight of a few ounces and 1200 feet of line (with 1800 more in prospect,) we attempted the sounding of this mysterious depth. The oars of the boat had disappeared unaccountably the evening before; perhaps the genus loci did not enjoy having his fabled reputation too widely tested. Moreover, the wind was blowing a gale. We attempted to pole up against it to the windward end of the lake, hoping to drift back and sound, along the middle line. But our poles encountered great depth of soft slime, and we were finally obliged to tow along the slippery, uncertain shore. At this point, two men were found. One of them had had many a long sniff of salt water in former days, and with the other's help, improvised a pair of oars from booth poles and a gasoline case.

It was great to see the lusty cowboys with their splendid muscles take to the unwonted element, put forth their utmost effort and whirl around like a gyrating top in the sport of the wind. Then the old salt, sadly crippled with rheumatism, steps into the place of both, the boat takes a steady course, is halted at proper intervals, the soundings all made, and the temperatures recorded.

"From haunted spring and dale
Edged with the poplar pale
The parting genius is with sighing sent."

Before nautical knowledge and dexterity the lusty, full-grown fable is vanquished. Scarcely thirty feet was the greatest depth found, and the temperature was steadily 87 degrees. This temperature and the marked saltness of the water tempted the writer later in the day to take a plunge and a good long swim, such as he had not enjoyed for many a year. Thirty feet of depth is quite as good for this and other purposes as 30,000—and from the date of that swim the writer is a captive to the strange charm of the place, its many unique qualities and features. No year should pass, could he but have his wish, without the luxury of many a swim in the warm and invigorating brine. Along these hissing, steaming cliffs and shores one would like to pry and peer at leisure into these loopholes in nature's great, underground laboratories, and over these vast levels of the lower delta, to gather up and ponder, one by one, the many elements of the complex hydrostatic problem which the great river presents in its chosen playground, and finally, perhaps, and best of all, to see the treachery of the gleaming mirage, its broken promises, more than atoned, more than fulfilled, in some wide inundation, silently spreading the shining floods over the ample pastures, later to feed and fatten a thousand herds.

But now, for a time, the world must be adios to the land of the river and our kind friends. For our trail leads southward across the desert toward the airy uplands, the pines and snows of the lofty San Pedro Mirtir.

Reconstructing Ruins.

A description is published here of the remarkable progress made by the Generalphoros Kavadias in the restoration works at Epidauros, begun some years ago.

The ruins have been thoroughly gone through for the first time, and a vast quantity of fragments brought under shelter in the local museum and reconstructed. That applies to the pediment of the Temple of Aesculapius, the Artemis Temple, and a great part of the propylaeum. Of still greater importance is the work done on the Tholos of the famous fifth-century architect Polycletes. The vast stones which formed this building have almost all been found, and an exact picture drawn of its original state.

This reconstruction differs widely from the drawings of earlier investigators, who had seen less of the ruins. It is stated that the Corinthian columns were a meter in diameter. The position of the frieze has been determined, and it has even been proved that there was no opening in the roof, which is interpreted as meaning that the building originally had windows.

Another report describes Prof. Doerpsfeld's excavations at Olympia. The professor says the excavations reveal several distinct cultural deposits, beginning with Greek classical remains and ending with neolithic relics dating back 3000 years B. C.—[Berlin Correspondence Westminster Gazette.

The Old-Fashioned Door Plate.

"Door plates are going out of fashion," said a man whose business it is to make plates of all kinds. "Twenty years ago every man of prominence had his name graven upon a plate and that plate affixed to his front door, that all might know who dwelt within. The daily task of the negro houseman was to rub the door plate until it shone. It took the place of the Lares and Penates of the Romans, and was attended to just as carefully as were the ancient household gods.

"Everything is changing now, though. I suppose the reason is that people don't have homes as they used to. They simply live in houses and apartments and move around so much that a door plate couldn't possibly endure the peripatetic existence. A collection of brass door plates screwed to the portal of a big apartment building would, I confess, look rather odd."—[Louisville Courier-Journal.

Life in the Art Studio.

SOME EUROPEAN PERSONAGES FOR WHOM CORSI SAT AS MODEL.

By a Special Contributor.

THERE are models and models. No trickier register of studio temperature could be found than an artist model, were he so minded. For he sees the artist as the artist could never see himself, though he studied his mirror all day, and as no one outside the studio, however intimate, could ever see him. The model sees the artist in his "working clothes, in his working manners—at a moment, in a word, when an artist is best worth knowing, though the essential thing in workman and work is the passion of life whose fires are within." Corsi knows all there is to know of the refined and also easy camaraderie of bohemianism within the mysterious precincts of art's domain. Also he has seen all there is to see of the reckless uncontrol of the slum life into which artists, art students, and models sometimes sink. Also he has seen the most there is to see of the studio work and ways of personages whose lives are in no way touched by the studio social entanglements.

Ordinarily the model is tolerated in the studio, and out of it makes up the offal of the great city's underworld life. There are the contadini of Rome—the newcomer peasant and the old-comer peasant—who daily assemble in the Piazza d'Espagna awaiting selection by the artists. It is only a hit-or-miss opportunity for them, but every morning they are there.

And there are, in Paris and out of Paris, the well-known "types du Quartier Latin" who are of the sort that inhabit "Boul Miche" and the Rue Vaugirard, and the frequenters of the Luxembourg Gardens on Friday afternoons, and of "Le Taverne du Panteon," and those who attach themselves to the weird, wild pleasure seekers of the "Bal Bullier," "Le Grillon," and the "Bal des Quat's Arts," etc., etc.—their lives brightened, saddened, and shortened by the habits of their profession. Their intimate association with their patron artists gives them certain values out of life, and the artists in their turn—well, Mr. Edwin Blashfield has gone so far as to say, in comparing Byzantine art with that of Greece, "What had so changed the type?—so utterly transformed the ideal of the artist? How came those hollow-eyed wraiths into the place of the Greek gods? Was it incapacity in the artists, or degeneracy of the models? It was both—as the history of the conditions of Byzantium in the sixth century shows."

It is Antonio Corsi's ambition to establish, like Colorossi of Paris, a school for models. And into that to put his long and varied experience as model, together with his rare and extensive collection of costumes and artist's studio properties. And in this way models, art students, and artists could have the benefit of such necessary accessories to his art, and at a minimum price.

Antonio Corsi's song and talk are often interrupted by a distressing cough.

"Oh, Jo, that's nothing. When I was a lad during my street-singing days, we often had to sleep out of doors on the ground. Sometimes it would be rain-soaked, sometimes blanketed with a sleety snow. The next day we would dry out while walking, the sun would steam the dampness out of us. I didn't feel it much, then, but this cough dates back to that time."

"Oh, Jo, yes, I've broken down once or twice."

"Do I like my profession—Jo, I should think I do. Think what it gives me—the acquaintance and sometimes companionship and friendship of some of the greatest men and women in the countries where I find myself. I have the advantage of thinking with them, for a time, the great thoughts as they think them, and which have made their lives great. As model I have had the acquaintance, and in a way a very intimate acquaintance—with members of the royal families of England, Denmark, and Germany.

"I sat to the late Empress Frederick in Berlin for eleven or twelve weeks, and Her Majesty was what I call a pretty good artist. I know, the moment an artist begins work, the value of him, by the way he treats his model.

"Here is a letter from the St. James Palace to me from Her Serene Highness, the Countess of Gleichen. She is a niece of Her Majesty the late Queen Victoria. The Countess has also a studio in Rome, and is one of the royal women to whom I have sat a lot. Her father was a German admiral in the British navy. She is a most beautiful and gifted young woman. On her return from Rome one time she brought with her some beautiful Italian march music. She played this for her brother, the major. He was so pleased with it that he put it into the hands of the band master of the Scottish Highlanders, who accompany the Royal Guards every morning from the Chelsea Barracks to the St. James Palace, where they change guards. They've used that music ever since for the march. The Countess says many a time she has regretted that she gave her favorite music for that treadmill service. You see the Guards pass her window every day.

"When I became quite well acquainted with her she asked my opinion about a good art school for her sister. I was glad she did this. You see, I've had experience in all the leading art schools of England. I suggested the Slade School as by far the best and most important of them all for instruction.

"Oh, si, si, royal artists may not exhibit much in the salons, but they keep up sharp rivalry between them in their studios. I would not think of praising or dispraising the work of one royal lady to another royal lady. I laughs in my sleeve at the sly little remarks underneath so much royal good breeding, calculated to make me size up the work of one royal artist to another. Oh, Jo, no, Corsi, the Italian, knows too much to be caught by such a thread, even if it is so very fine and silken. I always keeps my counsel.

"Here is the photograph of two knights. The Countess modeled them from me. They are placed on either side of a memorial bust of the late Lord Ponsonby, private secretary to Her Majesty the late Queen Victoria. The bust is in one of the royal palaces of England.

"The Countess does sculpturing principally. I was the original of her statue of 'Peace.' In this letter she speaks of her brother, a major in the Boer war. He was at one time seriously wounded. When he would come to her studio he chatted with me. I got pretty well acquainted with him.

"She says in this letter:

"'Thank you very much, Signor Corsi, for your good wishes, which I return most heartily, for Christmas and New Year. My brother is much better, and will soon be fighting again, I am sorry to say. I think later on I shall want you for a day, if you can come to sit to me. I will write when ready.'"

Corsi was retained as model for Her Royal Highness, Princess Louise, Duchess of Argyle, for over two years consecutively, going to her three days out of every week. The story of the environment of her royal studio in Kensington Palace would make valuable and interesting reading. However that may not be told here, only to say Princess Louise's apartments in Kensington Palace include the historic stair of only a few steps, upon which stood Her Majesty the late Queen Victoria, as a girl of 18, having been called out of her bed at midnight, and upon their landing, in her night clothes, she was first hailed from the foot of these stairs, by the old Ministers of State, as they bowed themselves down before her, "Our Sovereign Lady, Victoria, by the Grace of God, of Great Britain and Ireland, Queen, Defender of the Faith."

Princess Louise's work often commemorates patriotic events, as her group, "A Colonial Memorial." This group celebrates Empire Day, May 24, and also the birth of her royal mother, Queen Victoria. The "Colonial Memorial" was unveiled in St. Paul's Cathedral, His Majesty, King Edward, on that day in 1905. The group is also in memoriam of the British warriors and their soldiers who came from the remotest corners of the British empire and freely gave it their lives in the South African war.

Corsi says: "The group is in plaster, measuring fifteen feet from the tips of the angel's uplifted wings to the base," where rests the symbolic feet of the country's sacrifice. This is the pathetic figure of one of Briton's sons hanging to a crucifix, albeit an angel around and above him tenderly supports his tortured hands.

The symbolic representative in this famous group is Antonio Corsi's figure. It was for this work he was first commissioned by Princess Louise as her model.

"It was Seymour Lucas, R.A., who first suggested me to Her Royal Highness, and this is how it all came about: There is in the Royal Academy an embalmed man, for the benefit of the academy members and students. He is under lock and key in his glass case. An outsider would not even be allowed to sketch him. Under no circumstances could this model be removed from his case. The Princess got an idea of modeling her group from this embalmed man.

"She had a plaster cast made of him, and taken to her own studio. There she worked on her idea for the colonial group until she got a more or less satisfactory notion of what she wished to do. Then she called in Sir Lawrence Alma-Tadema, R.A.; Seymour Lucas, R.A., and the sculptor, Alfred Gilbert, R.A., to advise her. The idea of the subject pleased them all. But Seymour Lucas said: 'Princess, if it is your idea to execute this work simply for the pleasure you will find in putting into expression your imagination's creation, then I say, since you ask me, you might finish it as you have begun. But if it is for competitive or salable art work, then I should say that up to now your work is lost time.'

"The Princess replied: 'What do you suggest, Mr. Lucas?'

"'I suggest, Ma'am,' he answered, 'that you secure a life model for your work.'

"'I know of no model who would suit my purpose,' Princess Louise explained.

"'There is an Italian model who would be the very man for your work—Antonio Corsi by name,' said Mr. Lucas.

"And the Princess said: 'Very well, kindly send him here to me.'

"And so it was, I was booked for some of the most interesting sittings I ever had in any studio.

"One day a royal messenger came in search of me at my home. This created a big sensation in our locality. I wasn't in when he arrived, and he waited for me. When I came, he handed me a big envelope with a royal seal upon it. How important it made me feel! for this contained Her Royal Highness's command for me to come to Kensington Palace.

"When I was thinking out just how to go about it, I found myself rubbing my hand over my chin—and then I knew that the first thing must be a shave. So I told the messenger to go ahead, and that I would report at the palace directly.

"While I was being shaved and so on, the news got over the whole quarter. People came crowding around the barber shop, staring at me through the windows and pushing in at the door.

"They said: 'Her Royal Highness, Princess Louise, has sent for Corsi. He's going to the palace to be her model. He'll soon be a rich man now.' Some asked the others: 'How much will he get for it?' 'Aw, not less'n twenty pounds a day.' 'Twenty pounds, d'ye say? Humph! it'll be a hundred pounds a day, if anything,' and so on."

And it did turn out that the professional stocks of the Italian model leaped up to the top rung of popularity, not only for home folk but for studio folk as well, never to drop again. After that, Corsi was always designated as the royal artist model.

Corsi says: "It wasn't long before I was gotten up to the best of my ability in my studio gear, which is as good as nearly all the artists wear. This is a very important part of a model's success—always to be well dressed. I called a hansom, and directed, as I seated myself in it: 'Kensington Palace, please.' And the one other person was paralyzed that day. The old cabby thought his ears had failed him, and didn't budge.

"'Yer said, sur——'

"'Kensington Palace,' I said, 'and be quick—Her Royal Highness is already waiting for me.'

"'Awe, yes sur, yes sur.' And then he did some of his prettiest driving.

"The cabby got me there in good time. I had no trouble in being presented to the Princess with a note of command. She lead the way to the studio at once. The first thing I saw there was a large wooden cross. It stood about nine feet from the floor, including the pedestal. I didn't see any silken drapery about anywhere, no sofa cushions or pillows. Princess Louise's studio was a clay-begrimed, workman-looking place.

"She said: 'Take off your clothes, Corsi, and get up on that cross, and let me see your figure.' And I did so. I was soon upon the big cross. The Crucified One was a frequent pose of mine. I felt quite at home on the cross. I caught my wrists into the leather straps fastened to the arms of it, drew in my abdomen, making my ribs high and gaunt, and then turned my head and eyes in the direction she requested. Her Royal Highness looked me over from various viewpoints, then said: 'That's good; come down. Now what days can you give me, Corsi?' 'Yur-r-r-ile-ighness, Saturdays, Thursdays, and Sundays.'

"We did a great deal of work. The Princess is a hard worker when she does work. I always found her a gracious lady and considerate of her model. But I never forgot the rest times. The pose on the cross looks simple, but it is very trying. It becomes painful if there is not frequent release from the position. If I dropped dead I would not think of asking for rest while posing. That I always leave to the consideration of the artist. My poses with her were usually from one to two hours at a stretch.

"To keep from disturbing my pose, she would often light a cigarette and put it into my mouth, when I would be very tired. I liked this very well—but I'm afraid it developed the tired microbe in me prodigiously.

"She always had my meals served to me in the studio or in a room by myself, and when tea time came Princess Louise would have me take tea with her in the studio. When I got acquainted with her ways, I helped her a lot in the studio. At first there was a big Scotchman who used to fix her tools, move and fetch things for her. One day while I was on the cross Princess Louise suddenly turns to a half-finished clay model near her, and what does she do but furiously gouge out a big hole in its side. Then she says: 'Mac Closen, Mac Closen, stop staring at me, and come here and fill up that hole.'

"When people called during work hours, a footman announced their names from the studio door. Sometimes she would say: 'Admit them.' Sometimes she would see them in another room. When they came into the studio, she would always say: 'This is my model, Antonio Corsi.' There was nothing for me to do but just keep hanging on the cross. They knew who I was, I knew who they were. Very few artists give the models the consideration of an introduction. But then you see, all artists are not royal artists.

"His Majesty, King Edward, then Prince of Wales, often visited Princess Louise's studio. Almost always he said something agreeable to me. My mop of hair seemed to attract His Majesty. He showed a great deal of interest in his royal sister's work. Her Majesty Queen Victoria, visited her daughter in the studio from time to time.

"It wouldn't have surprised me if Princess Louise had asked me to put on the royal petticoats and take sittings for the Queen. As a matter of fact, I have sat in the clothes of nearly every dignitary of England to oblige the artists in finishing portraits of them. It so turned out that I was not asked to impersonate Queen Victoria.

"The first time the Princess honored me with an introduction to Her Majesty and the first time the Queen honored me with a word in conversation was on Empire Day—a 24th of May. I'll never forget that day. Princess Louise said to me: 'Corsi, we will not work this afternoon. It is my mother's birthday. She is going to open an exhibition here at the palace. If you like I'll have you admitted by a private entrance to view the pictures before the opening.'

"Thank Yur-r-r-rile-ighness, I'd like to see the pictures.'

"Then she said: 'Corsi, after this, when you address me, call me Ma'am. It's right to say Your Royal Highness, especially at first. But now you needn't Yur-r-rile-ighness me every time you speak to me.' So she says: 'Si, si, Yur-r-r-rile-ighness, I will.' 'Corsi,' says she. 'Ma'am,' says I.

"Then I goes to the gallery and looks the pictures over and I forgets all about the time. And when I comes to myself, Jo, I darts through the private entrance and straight into the royal party on the other side. There was Her Majesty the Queen supported by Princess Louise on one side and the late Duke of Cambridge on the other.

"I steps quickly to one side feeling very hot and uncomfortable. The Queen said to the Princess: 'Louise, who is that distinguished-looking man with the hair?' Then the Princess presented me to Queen Victoria.

"Her Majesty said: 'How are you, Corsi?'

"'Very well, Your Majesty,' says I, and I bows. With a gracious smile as she looked at the Princess, the Queen asked me how I liked her daughter's work. I says: 'Very much, Your Majesty.' The Princess smiled too. Her Majesty then said with a merry, teasing

At this they all laughed outright a hearty laugh. Then I breaks down and laughs, too, and bows very low as the party passed into the exhibit-room.

"My neighbors' curiosity as to my salary had gotten beyond their control, and mine, too. One day I made bold to speak with the Princess on the subject. She said: 'Send your bill to my secretary, Corsi; he'll attend to it.'

"I gained nothing by that. The whole matter was back on my shoulders. That was my difficulty, what should my bill be? I didn't know; perhaps nothing, out of courtesy to the Princess; perhaps the usual price without regard to her high station, and perhaps on the other hand, because of that I should ask five times the usual amount. But which, I couldn't by reasoning and thinking, and racking my brain about it make out which or what to do. I slept over it and dreamed over it, but nothing came to my mind. I would only wake up with a start to find that I wasn't a rich man at all. But after all, 'Er-r-r-rile-ighness as patron was a good deal. At last I confided my troubles to Sir Lawrence Alma-Tadema, to whom I was sitting at the time. He said: 'Corsi, make out your bill according to regulation rate, no more, no less.' I did, and immediately received the sum. Princess Louise was often obliged to postpone her studio work, but my salary always came for the full time.

"Children call Princess Louise the 'Fairy Princess,' because she sent them for a six weeks' outing to one of her children's homes in the country. The children of the institution were given a bazaar during that time, and the Princess bought my little girl a big doll and doll cart. We all prize it highly. There was something happened while the children were there which made Princess Louise write the head of the institution a letter, which I delivered to him, and to my certain knowledge, even if she can't turn a butterfly into a bird, as some Princesses have been supposed to do, she did by that letter turn a brute into a most polite gentleman."

The Admirable Side of Abdul Hamid.

Yet the fact remains that the Sultan has in many ways been an eminently good and successful ruler. He has probably done more for education than all his predecessors put together. He is, I believe, the only sovereign in the world who entertains at a picnic annually all the school children in his capital of both sexes and of every denomination. More than 3000 elementary schools have been opened since he came to the throne. He has endowed the Ottoman University with many scholarships and founded schools of law and medicine. He has been especially active in promoting the better education of women. He has museums and galleries. Though precious portions of his empire were torn from him by the Treaty of Berlin, he has contrived to keep what was left all but intact, and has showed consummate ability in playing off one European power against another. He has survived war, insurrection, treason, attempted assassination, bankruptcy.

So far from being in himself a cruel man, the testimony of all observers agrees in depicting Abdul Hamid as absolutely the reverse. "There is in Abdul Hamid," wrote a former Servian Minister who knew him intimately, "a peculiar modesty, timidity, and tenderness which are quite womanly. He always looks earnest, almost sad, as if he were subdued by the consciousness of his great responsibilities. He smiles quietly, almost sadly, very often, but he hardly ever laughs loudly. He is distinctly a man of esthetic taste. He is fond of flowers, of beautiful women, of fine horses, of lovely views of sea and land, of everything that is beautiful. He is an affectionate father. He can be, and is, a devoted friend to his friends. He is able to contract deep and faithful friendships. He is considerate, modest, charitable, and patient. His consciousness of his responsibilities toward God makes him hesitate to punish any one severely. Certainly he was never carried away by impulsiveness. He even exaggerates in his desire to consider every question from all points. He is slow; often much too slow for the nervous and impatient sons of the west. Terribly earnest as he is and so sensitive to everything touching his personal dignity, he has much of quiet humor in him. He quickly perceives the comic feature in things and men and in a peculiar, quiet way enjoys it. His sky is generally and almost permanently covered by clouds of state anxieties and personal melancholy. But from time to time, and most unexpectedly, those clouds are pierced by the sunny rays of a mild humor. Personally, I could never detect in his character even the shadow of cruelty."—[Sydney Brooks, in Harper's Weekly.

The Grave of Murietta.

LEGEND AND HISTORY CONCERNING THE WELL-KNOWN OUTLAW.

By a Special Contributor.

ON the top of one of the highest mountain ridges that separate the valleys of the Upper Sespe and Cuyama Rivers, in the northern portion of what is now Ventura county (formerly Santa Barbara county,) there is a grassy plat of ground, covering an area of perhaps an acre in extent, interspersed with a group of majestic pine trees which spread their broad branches above it as if in protection of the beautiful spot. It is indeed a lovely place, from which the eye can measure the long expanse of the winding Cuyama Valley and the lofty mountain peaks and ridges that stretch away in the distance on either side.

Although little known to the outside world on account of its isolation, being reached only by a rough and steep mountain trail, the place nevertheless has a history. At the foot of one of those giant trees there is an old grave and inscribed on the trunk of the tree is a rude cross which time has not obliterated, placed there years ago by unknown hands.

There is a legend in connection with this grave which has sufficient evidence of its reliability to warrant me in presenting it to the public, hoping it may help to settle a point in history that has hitherto been shrouded in doubt.

It is well known that in the early history of California, between the years 1845 and 1854, the country was infested with a desperate band of brigands and horse thieves under the leadership of a bloodthirsty desperado named Joaquin Murietta, whose cold-blooded murders and depredations extended mainly from the counties of Calaveras and Tuolumne on the north to San Diego on the south. Their early acts of murder and rapine created a reign of terror, and no doubt had a strong influence in establishing the rule of "Judge Lynch," who held sway in early days, and who sought to bring criminals to justice when corrupt courts and officials failed to do so. This murderous band would ride up to the cabin of a defenseless miner, shoot him down in cold blood, then secure his savings of the "precious dust" and ride away to seek new victims. When it became too "hot" for these bandits in the northern counties, they would ride away to the southland for a season. It is claimed on good authority that this band had a regular rendezvous in a large cave, difficult of access, in the mountains referred to at the beginning of this article.

At this time, the southern portion of the State was sparsely settled by a Spanish population, whose haciendas nestled in the greenest and richest valleys, while their vast flocks and herds grazed upon a thousand hills; for their possessions covered miles in extent. The people were prosperous, and the greatest drawback to their happiness was the dreaded raids of the terrible Murietta and his band of desperadoes. The latter would suddenly appear at some unprotected rancheria, rob the inmates of the house and drive off the stock to be disposed of through secret agents. If any opposed them, they were shot or butchered without mercy. The authorities of the "pueblos" were appealed to in vain for protection, and the desperadoes became bolder still.

In the winter of 1853-4 a fandango had been arranged to take place on a certain night at the hacienda of Don R——, and the beauties and gallants of all the surrounding country were on the qui vive for the festive occasion. At length the night came, and the señors and señoritas arrived, dressed in their best, and the saddled mustangs which had brought them were taken inside the corral and fastened to the inclosure. Soon the festivities began to the enlivening music of the violin, guitar and flute, in the good old Spanish fashion of dancing and lovemaking. On a table in the reception room as you entered from a broad veranda were placed glasses and decanters, containing wines of the best home-made product, and beside them a large bowl filled with the choicest tobacco to be obtained and a tray containing papers from which the deft fingers of the charming señoritas fashioned the fragrant cigarritos for their sweethearts and themselves. To omit these adjuncts would have been considered a breach of good manners and hospitality not easily overlooked.

When the festivities had progressed some time, and all was "merry as a marriage bell," three strangers appeared upon the scene who had not been invited. They were all seemingly under the age of 40 years, of fine muscular build, long, curling, black hair and whiskers, and features not at all repulsive in appearance. After throwing aside their outer cloaks, it was seen that they were dressed in all the gilt and splendor denoting the wealthy Spanish don. With a courtly bow to the assembled company, in that graceful manner denoting the polished cavalier, they requested permission to join in the festivities, which was hospitably granted. They had some plausible excuse to account for their presence in that vicinity which was designed to allay suspicion.

To some of the señoritas present, this acquisition to their numbers did not appear in the least distasteful, as they appeared to have been accustomed to good society. The señors, however, looked upon the strangers as intruders, but the rules of hospitality forbade any open rupture inside the house. It soon became whispered outside that they were none other than the dreaded outlaw Murietta, and his two lieutenants, Andreas Armijo and Tomas Maria Carillo, whose bloody deeds were almost as noted as those of Murietta. In support of this belief, it was noticed that they did not remove the pistols and knives from their belts as would have been natural to do to disarm suspicion.

The dance progressed, and it was noticed that the leader was paying marked attention to one of the señoritas, whose acknowledged suitor was present, which was fast growing into a lively flirtation with her. The young señor observed these advances with flashing eye, and he was soon afterward missed from the company. When the time came to separate, quick as thought, the chief threw his arms about the señorita, and ere she could free herself from his embrace, had repeatedly kissed her. One listening outside might have heard, in line with the window, "Sacra!" hissed scarcely above the breath from close-drawn lips. Then a form swiftly and silently glided into the shadow of the chaparral and alder, where the beams of the waning moon shimmered through their leafy branches and cast a gleam from the barrel of a rifle which he carried.

The three strangers immediately mounted their horses and as they politely lifted their sombreros, the leader spoke: "Thanks, pretty señoritas, for your kindness, and an evening delightfully spent in your society; especially for the closing scene in it. Ha! ha! ha! Joaquin Murietta will return ere long to repeat the performance! Ha! ha! ha! Adios!" Then gently touching spurs to their horses' flanks, they disappeared in the direction the other señor had taken. A little while afterward a solitary shot rang out on the still night air, echoing along the mountain ridge; and a few days later this grave was found beside the tree, with the cross upon it, but Murietta was seen no more in the vicinity.

The young señor married the girl of his choice, and engaged in the occupation of stock raising on his own account, but always seemed reticent in regard to the scenes of that memorable night. A few years later, in an annual round-up for branding stock, he was mortally injured by a vicious bull, and a priest hastily summoned to receive his dying confession. Whatever this confession was, it was never divulged, but some words were let fall that strengthened their belief in the identity of this grave.

About this time, some passing hunters observed a strange-looking man, grizzled and bronzed, intently noting the spot, and asking whether he was a relative or friend of the deceased, all they could elicit from him was: "I once knew him." Then he disappeared as mysteriously as he came, the only clew to his identity being that his sheath knife bore on its handle in rude letters: "T. M. C."

It has been believed by many that Murietta was killed in 1853 during one of his raids in the vicinity of Monterey, and was decapitated and his head taken to Stockton to claim the reward offered by the State for him, "dead or alive." It is also a fact of history that the reward was paid for the head taken there as that of the outlaw. There are others, however, who are firm in the belief that it was not Murietta's head, but that of another member of his band who resembled him; that Murietta was seen in these parts several months later than his reported death, as related in the legend; and that the lonely grave on the mountain top, beside the tree bearing the rude cross, marks the real resting-place of the great outlaw and bandit.

The North Woods Indian.

Emerson Hough contributes a notable article on the north woods Indian to May Recreation. The following is a characteristic excerpt:

"This short, squat, broad-shouldered native of the north is not elegant, perhaps, but one does not find it in one's soul quite to despise him. He is a good deal of a fellow, this Montagnais, this Chippewa, this Woods Cree even, lazy and immoral as the latter may be. He may like muskrat, but so has many a white man. He may like dog, but, let us repeat, dog is not bad when one is very hungry. He may be silent of habit, but so would you be if you had to make part of your living by not talking. He may be lazy, and so would you be had you been trained for 2000 years to rest once in a while or die. But, take it all in all, he is a good deal of a fellow. We must admire the man who can do more than we can, who will run white water where we get cold feet at the thought, who can read the tape ticker of the wilderness better than ourselves. We admire the man who has prevailed in the physical world where fate has put him. We admire the man who has prevailed anywhere in his environment and is therefore a success. The north woods Indian is a success. What are you and I?

"It was the north woods Indians who led the white race across the upper wilderness trails, and helped that race to get and to hold its footing there. If you read the story of Sir George Simpson, of David Thompson, of Sir Alexander Mackenzie, of Harmon, of Hearne, of Alexander Henry the younger, indeed, of any of the early or late explorers of the Hudson's Bay, or the old Nor'west Company, always you will find that the real man behind the pack and paddle was this northern native."

She Got the Money.

The young wife of a Kaslo, B. C., man, who is not especially sweet-tempered, one day approached her lord concerning the matter of $100 or so."

"I'd like to let you have it, my dear," began the husband, "but the fact is I haven't that amount in the bank this morning—that is to say, I haven't that amount to spare, inasmuch as I must take up a note for $200 this afternoon."

"Oh, very well, James!" said the wife, with an ominous calmness, "if you think the man who holds the note can make things any hotter for you than I can—why, do as you say, James."—[Kaslo Kootenain.

"Gracious, no!" replied the girl graduate. "I've still got to give a year to the study of alcoholism, six months to the divorce laws, a quarter to morbid psychology, and another quarter to bridge and bridge cheating."

"But—but——" we stammered.

"You see," she explained, "I intend to be a novelist."

"King" James.

ACCOUNT OF THE OCCASION WHEN HE FELL FROM GRACE.

By a Special Contributor.

THE teamen had foregathered at Vancouver, B. C., from the various corners of the British empire to take the steamer to their respective stations in the Orient.

Each season witnessed this periodic exodus and return; thus there was established a fraternal bond among these tea planters and exporters which defied the vicissitudes of time and practical joking.

When it was found that "King" James—known to his constituents by the more formal appellation of Mr. James Campbell—was to be among the passengers of the Empress of India, there was rejoicing among the clan. When it was further discovered that Miss Birdd was returning to Shanghai with her brother on the same steamer, the fellows were effusive in their gratitude to a benign Providence, for were not their victims delivered up to them? They made secret covenants with each other to be worthy of this opportunity thrust upon them.

A practical joke was as the breath of life to their nostrils, and "King" James at least was legitimate prey.

Miss Birdd and James Campbell had been the objects of kindly speculation ever since he had eschewed his bachelor habits and danced attendance upon the prettiest girl of two Shanghai seasons, yet nothing came of it, as far as the brotherhood could see. It was shrewdly suspected that the "King" had never screwed up his courage to the point of a proposal. He was notably shy and reserved except upon the theme of his genealogy.

Mac Fadden asserted that his primordial ancestors antedated the Adam and Eve dynasty, but then Mac Fadden was given to slight exaggeration when under the mental stimulus of a B. and S.

Miss Birdd had views anent the drinking habit of the Orient. They were strong views, emphasized by various degrees of rigor toward the offenders who frequented her teas. That the chronic and intermittent imbibers did frequent them when nothing more exhilarating than fragrant Oolong was to be obtained, spoke volumes for Miss Birdd's inherent charm and sweetness.

"King" James was a white sheep among the black. The flowing bowl had no charms for him. Mac Fadden called him Dodo, because, as he carefully explained, the species was extinct. However, Mac Fadden was a scoffer and himself in love with Miss Birdd.

For the first few days after the Empress of India sailed from Vancouver, to most of the passengers life proved a burden and food a snare. The Pacific belied its name. The ship was hurled to the crest of mountainous waves, then sucked down—down to the great troughs of the sea in a way that made them feel with deadly certainty that the bottom had dropped out of things.

On the fourth day out, Mac Fadden, followed limply by the others, ascended to the smoking-room. The sea had apparently recovered its level, and a cigar at this stage might not prove fatal.

"We must wake things up a bit, boys," announced the oracle; "what do you say to a banquet, given in honor of a certain high personage among us?" He looked with preternatural gravity at the others.

"A what?" echoed the limp ones with languid curiosity.

"You all know," explained Mac Fadden, "that 'King' James has honored us with his company on this trip."

The others nodded with livelier interest, beginning to scent mischief.

"Now I propose, gentlemen, that we form ourselves into a committee of eleven, to do homage to 'King' James. He has never been properly appreciated among us. What more fitting tribute could we offer him than to celebrate the occasion of his birthday? Yes," in reply to the looks of surprise, "he confided to me that he has birthdays, although it does seem somewhat trite. This prerogative he exercises on Saturday; that will give us two days in which to make the elaborate preparations befitting so impressive an occasion."

The others joyfully agreed. Yet the full, rich possibilities of the plan did not suggest themselves until the arch-conspirator reminded them in this wise:

"You know that James does not drink, boys, so we must not tempt him to even look upon the wine when it is red. We'll have champagne instead, hey?"

"Where is James now?" some one asked.

"He's on the quarter-deck, explaining to Miss Birdd why the sea doesn't 'phosphorate' in all weathers," grinned Wiley of Cheefoo.

"Ahem," grimly commented Mac Fadden, "pity to interrupt so instructive a tete-a-tete. Somebody fetch him. We will carefully prepare His Majesty for the honor in store for him. He'll swallow the bait whole, he's such a duffer."

Some people are born to the purple, others achieve it. "King James was of the latter class.

When the gala night arrived, his royal, if sometimes diminutive person was arrayed in a fur-lined cloak which one of the ladies had generously contributed. It trailed majestically from his shoulders, and lay at least three inches on the floor.

"I—I s-say, you fellows," he protested, "suppose I should t-trip over the thing, don't you know."

"Keep your nerve up, old man," encouraged his Lord High Chancellor, Mac Fadden. "Here, take a drop of this. It will do you good," and despite the King's protests, he forced down his throat a stiff whisky cocktail. The effect was magical. The King's eyes brightened. His morbid self-esteem, characteristic of all sensitive natures, became colossal. He settled his white paper crown more firmly upon his regally-poised head, and prepared to descend upon his admiring subjects in a manner befitting a monarch.

"Steady, Your Majesty! Now, fellows, get into line. Here, Wiley, take the baton—I mean the mace"—handing him a heavy walking-stick. "Now, Gentlemen of the Bedchamber, to your places. Somebody start 'God Save the King.'"

Triumphantly the procession entered the dining-saloon. The Chinese waiters looked on indifferently at these barbarians making fools of themselves. Not so the good-natured captain, who entered into the spirit of the mummery and gave the signal to rise. The amused passengers to a man obeyed.

The royal suite was headed by Mac Fadden, who walked backward carrying a cushion filched from the smoking-room. Upon the cushion lay a pasteboard "key of state," though just what this meant was not very clear to any of them; however, it mysteriously added to the pageantry and so served its purpose.

MacFadden stood six feet two in his socks. King James, with the aid of his high heels, was barely over five feet one, yet every foot was kingly. You would have known his progenitors were royal by the way he strutted.

There seems to be a sub-consciousness pervading the various members of the body human—a force which leads them to act automatically, in harmony with the prevailing mental idea. "King" James's mind was absorbed in the contemplation of his exalted birthright. His well-shaped legs took upon themselves airs and graces which would have done honor to any puppet state king.

As the dignified procession walked down the passage dividing the long central table from the many side tables, "King" James cast a furtive glance in the direction of the girl he adored, who sat at the farthest table with three other "ladies-in-waiting." She was looking on with smiling approval—upon which His Majesty rejoiced exceedingly.

At the extreme end of the room was placed the banquet table. Not a Solomon, with all his reputed glory, could have surpassed that array. There was a glittering display of glass and silver; Japanese dwarf plants decorated the table, garlands of autumn leaves festooned its damask lengths, while in the center a yellow silk scarf gave the last touch to the picture.

"King" James sat at the head of the table, facing Miss Birdd in her distant corner. His Lord High Chancellor, with Machiavellian intent, sat at his right within easy reach of his champagne glass. The other courtiers were placed without regard to precedent.

"A toast to King James!" cried Mac Fadden. "Here, Your Majesty, let me fill your glass. There, there, man!" as the King made a feeble gesture of dissent, "you can't refuse to drink to your own health. Out upon you!"

The toast was drunk standing. James, whose ideas were growing confused, attempted to stand also, but was pulled back into his chair by the ever-watchful Chancellor.

The menu which followed reflected credit upon the ingenuity of the prime mover of the feast, no less than upon the ship's cook. There was "King James on Toast," which had a hint of cannibalism in it, but proved to be innocuous when taken from glasses with a verbal preliminary.

"Royal Pheasant," "Red Mullet a la James," and "King in the Hole" were some of the delectable dishes tributary to the presiding personage.

Poor "King" James was forced to respond to each toast, and his attentive Lord High Chancellor took great pains to see that his glass was properly filled each time. So unostentatiously was it done, however, that the unsuspecting victim did not know how much he was imbibing. In a laudable desire to be gracious to his subjects, he toasted each member of the royal suite, then losing his perception of relative values, he toasted himself.

About half-way through the banquet, Pinckney of the Shanghai Bank called for a speech from "His Majesty."

"A speech! A speech!" shouted the others.

The "King" looked helplessly at his chancellor. "W-what shall I say?"

"Oh, say anything," encouraged his temptor. "Tell them how you sprang from nothing—I mean, from a long line of noble Scotch ancestry. Brace up, old man, you're getting on famously. Take another swallow of champagne, it will fertilize your massive brain."

"Ah—ah never d-drink a drop!" protested His Majesty.

"Quite so, but on this momentous occasion, you know, when the eyes of the world are upon you—so to speak——"

"His Majesty" beamed affectionately upon his friend. He nodded his head at the imminent risk of upsetting his crown, unfastened his necktie and collar, and was only prevented from loosening other restrictive garments by the timely intervention of the alert Mac Fadden.

His first attempt to rise was not successful. The second effort brought him to his feet, with some assistance from the Chancellor. Steadying himself by leaning heavily upon the table, he managed to keep a fairly upright position.

"D-dearly beloved brethren," he began, digging into the soil of his memory for some fitting form of address, "w-w-we are gathered together——"

"For goodness sake, James, take another tack! Tell 'em you're glad to see 'em," interrupted Mac Fadden.

"C-courtiers and fren's," he obediently recommenced, "permit me to say that I 'p-preciate this sort of thing. The British heart wa-wa-wa-was ever loyal'n' true——"

"Hear! hear!" cried the courtiers.

"Where was I?" demanded the kingly speechmaker of the table at large.

"'Loyal and true,'" prompted the Chancellor; "magnificent, old man; keep it up!"

"Yes, tha-that's whatza matter with 'em til. I'm l-loyal'n' true myshelf, but I've never told Her M-[illegible] esty the Qu-queen." This he breathed mysteriously, one confiding a state secret, while his eyes sought table beyond.

Mac Fadden realized that the time was ripe for coup d'etat. "Now is your chance," he gravely sured "King" James, winking at the others. "Here are," refilling the glass as he spoke, "show that have royal courage; go over to her table and toast Queen of Beauty. Speak out like a man—tell her are going to have her share your throne." Thus cseled Faustus the Chancellor.

"W-w-which one?" valiantly asked the "King," ing into the trap with enthusiasm.

"Whisht, lad, why Miss Birdd to be sure; th across the way. Can't you see?" impatiently.

"B-b-but there seems to be several of 'em." "King" spoke doubtfully, as he peered in the direc of his inamorata.

Mac Fadden covertly steered him in the right di tion, while the rest mirthfully awaited results, as t stood up, glasses in hand, and exchanged even bets the unsteady scion of a royal race.

The "King's" legs acted independently of the r will. They described funnel-shaped circles toward ladies-in-waiting, who were indeed waiting for w might happen to the owner of the legs. It was a c cial moment. Obstacles seemed to confront His Maj that had before been invisible to the naked eye couldn't account for them, but by a supreme effort the royal will he dominated his insubordinate mem and evaded these movable entities. At last, he reac in safety the small table and the amused ladies.

Did I say "amused" ladies? The expression must qualified. Miss Birdd was distinctly not amused.

Mac Fadden, eagerly watching the scene, obser with secret triumph that her blue eyes dilated wr fully; her red lips took on an unaccustomed curv scorn.

"Exit James Campbell," he muttered to himself.

"To Your Majesty, the Q-queen of Hearts—h-heart," carefully enunciated James. He raised glass in his shaking fingers, and smiled tenderly Miss Birdd. The expression upon her face arrested For the space of a heartbeat he stood transfixed by eloquent appeal there.

He read, not contempt—not even reproach—divine pity, such as a mother might feel for her er child. Ever thus does the compassionate heart woman, the feminine principle of life, manifest itself

His glass shattered softly on the floor, the gol liquid seeping into the velvet pile of the carpet. desperate effort he steadied his brain and drove for a moment the paralysis which was creeping his faculties.

"Evelyn," he entreated huskily, "forgive!" plunged forward upon the table, from whence he borne by the remorseful banqueters to the sanctity oblivion of his cabin.

Mr. and Mrs. James Campbell are an ideally ha couple. The clan frequently takes tea with them their cosy Shanghai bungalow. There is one, howe who is conspicuous by his absence—the erstwhile L High Chancellor, who instigated a certain memor banquet.

THE DANGER AND ESCAPE OF AN INDIAN DANCING GIRL.

By a Special Contributor.

IDENTIFIED on the face of one of the San Bernardino Mountains overlooking the verdant valley, was the impression of a huge arrowhead; to the simple Indian mind the imprint made by the fiery arrow of the god Mutcat. Far below in the valley stood the adobe-walled supply-station, and the tile-roofed mission chapel, erected by the brown-robed padres for the worship of the true God, and dedicated to San Bernardino, in whose honor the valley was named. Save the brush-covered huts in the adjoining rancheria, there was no other habitation in the valley.

Late at night long after the chiming of the vesper bells at the chapel had ceased, an Indian girl was dancing barefooted on the hard ground, high up on the mountain above the arrowhead; throwing her weight heavily first on one foot, then on the other, in time with the rude chanting of a hundred old men and women seated in a circle around her. Through long black hair falling loosely over pretty face and youthful form, she gazed out fearfully, like a frightened fawn, into the faces of the terrified people around her; all maddened by the recent shocks of earthquake.

The first of the terrible shocks came that very morning, when the Indians were gathered in the little chapel below to witness the baptism of the dancer, named Utcha, meaning good in the Indian tongue. All were anxious to view the novel ceremony, and every eye was fixed upon the brown-robed priest as he dipped the baptismal shell in the stone font and raised his hands.

"Ego te baptizo in nomine Patris," rang out the clear voice of the priest as he poured on the water the first time; "et Filii," he continued, pouring the second time; "et Spiritus Sanctii," he concluded, pouring the third time.

Then all at once, just as the priest poured on the last drop of regenerating water, there was a mysterious rumbling and a rushing sound, and the chapel shook to its very foundations, as if an unseen hand had roughly seized it. For a moment the dazed Indians stared at each other in wild-eyed consternation. Then some one cried: "El temblor! El temblor!" ("The earthquake,") and all save the priest rushed pell-mell through the door.

Outside their terror grew into frenzy, for there they discovered a new hot spring bubbling up among the old ones near the chapel. To their untrained minds, these unusual occurrences seemed to proceed from the evil spirit Isel, who must be angry at the baptism of Utcha. In vain the good padre reassured them; they fled panic-stricken to the mountains, dragging with them the bewildered Utcha.

Seeking to appease the angry spirit, they assembled on the mountain above the arrowhead, and, advised by the old Hechicero, sorcerer of the tribe, commenced the Dance of Deprecation. Bidden by the Hechicero as a penance for her baptism, Utcha had danced ceaselessly, but most unwillingly, since early sundown. There was no change in the tiresome dance; she beat time continuously with her feet to the monotonous singing. Weak from exhaustion, she was beginning to lag a trifle behind the chant.

"Faster, faster, Utcha!" angrily exclaimed the wizened old Hechicero. "We must finish and make the sacrifice, if the chapel is to be destroyed before day."

The words were like a blow to the weary girl, who until now had not thought of the chapel being in danger. But all at once she fully realized that the crafty Hechicero, ever jealous of the influence of the padres, intended to work upon the fears of the Indians and incite them to destroy the chapel. Instantly the awful fatigue of her body was forgotten, and her mind was alert to find a way to warn the people in the valley below. For well she knew that the priest had already returned to San Gabriel, and that Miguel, the Indian capitan left in charge, would not be able with the few men in his command to withstand an unexpected attack upon the chapel.

Over and over, again and again, as she danced, the one thought coursed through her mind: that Miguel, from whom she had learned the new faith, whom she loved more than life, and whom she was to marry at the next visit of the padre on Christmas Eve, was in danger, and she must save him. Plan after plan came to her mind in quick succession, only to be dismissed as quickly. After all there appeared to be but one way; she must escape and give the warning.

Before she could act, her thoughts were suddenly interrupted by the savage Hechicero, who held out his hand as a signal for the chanting to cease, and then meaningly pointed his bony finger at her.

"Now, Utcha," he snarled, "a sacrifice must be made to appease the angry spirit. If one is not acceptable, another must be found."

The words and look of the wolfish Hechicero, as he fixed his glaring eyes upon her, were full of evil import to the frightened girl, and recalled vividly to her mind long-forgotten stories, related to her in early childhood by old Indian women, of young girls being offered as living sacrifices in times of great excitement. True, the stories were merely traditions of olden times, and no one now living had ever witnessed such rites. Yet might not the merciless Hechicero in his fanaticism revert to the old practice and offer a living sacrifice? Also, was he not displeased with her, and had he not threatened her with the vengeance of the angry spirit for accepting the faith of the friars? The thought at first stunned her, then strengthened her determination to escape. She started to slip out quietly through the circle, and had almost reached the outer edge, when the Hechicero at one bound seized her roughly by the arm.

"Stay, Utcha!" he thundered. "You must listen to the traditions of your people, and offer a sacrifice to the angry spirit; even so may his awful anger be appeased —follow me."

Moving from left to right in a circle around a coyote shrine, the Hechicero dragged the helpless girl after him, and chanted the Indian tradition of Isel, the evil spirit, typified by the coyote.

After a while he stopped before the coyote shrine. This consisted of a crate-like altar made of twigs, upon which was placed in a standing position, so as to give the appearance of a live animal, the skin of a coyote, including the head and feet, stuffed with feathers, beaks, and talons of eagles and hawks, horns of deer, and claws of lions and bears. A bow and a few arrows were placed on the outside of this skin, and the feathers of arrows projected from its mouth.

Suddenly turning to the people, the Hechicero ordered them to bring the sacrifice. Quickly they brought great baskets full of food. At the Hechicero's command, Utcha placed the baskets of food on the altar. All at once there was a slight trembling of the earth followed by an awful shock. The Hechicero's hold on Utcha was loosened, and he was thrown violently to the ground. The terror-stricken people sat staring vacantly at each other. The Hechicero was the first to recover.

"The sacrifice is not sufficient!" he shouted, springing to his feet. "The spirit demands a living sacrifice!"

In unison, as if with one voice, the people all cried: "Utcha, Utcha, to the sacrifice!"

The Hechicero turned to seize the girl, but his hand closed on thin air. She was gone.

Taking advantage of the momentary stupefaction of the Hechicero, Utcha had slipped away, and was then hastening down the precipitous mountain trail to the valley. The sharp flint-like rock cut her feet, and the thorny chaparral tore her clothing, but she hurried on. Suddenly, in turning a bend, she came upon a horseman riding up the trail.

"Ho, nitchul!" (woman,) he exclaimed. "Why so fast?" Then dismounting, he came toward her leading his horse.

In the darkness he did not recognize her, but she knew him at once. It was the dreaded Eno, eater of human flesh, whose duty it was to officiate at the funeral of a capitan by cutting a large piece of flesh from the neck and back of the shoulder of the dead body, and eating it in the presence of the mourners, as did the storied coyote of old at the obsequies of Ouiot, the first capitan of the Indians. Unless this rite was performed before the body was burned, the dead capitan could not take his place among the stars with his predecessors.

Utcha, like all Indian girls, had been taught to fear and avoid the dreaded Eno, for according to Indian custom and teaching, if any woman ever met him face to face, he had the right to claim her as his very own, and she must not resist through fear of the many inflictions that might follow her refusal. For a moment the old Indian belief predominated, and she awaited his coming with no thought of escape; then she thought of the chapel, and the new faith prevailed. Seizing a large stone, she threw it at him with all her might, and, as he fell to the ground, she caught his horse.

At that moment a few of her pursuers appeared in sight. Their yells of triumph told that they had discovered the fugitive. A flight of arrows from their bows passed over her head, warning her that no time could be lost. Mounting, she gave her horse free rein, and, urging him down the trail at full speed, was soon out of range of the arrows.

Most of the pursuers were afoot, but as Utcha looked back, she could see the Hechicero and two other men following on horses. She was perfectly conscious of the danger of being overtaken. She knew it was to be a race for life, and that she would have to avail herself of every artifice of horsemanship.

Knowing her horse to be the swiftest, she would hold him in and only travel at half-speed until her pursuers were close upon her; then she would let him go at full speed. When far enough ahead again, she would slacken pace and let her pursuers gain upon her. Thus she managed to give her horse refreshing breathing spells, and all the while kept her pursuers following at breathless speed. In this way she hoped to jade their horses, and at the same time keep her own horse fresh, so as to be able to distance them on the home-stretch to the station.

But once in passing through a ravine, Utcha found the way barred by a great number of grizzly bears, together with their cubs, feeding across the trail. To avoid them, she had to leave the trail, and go around over the rocky ground above the ravine. When she regained the trail, her pursuers were so close upon her that a spear thrown by one of them passed through her sleeve. With cries of victory, they began to close in, when Utcha's horse, frightened by their savage yells, made a mighty dash and outstripped them.

The trail ahead skirted a precipitous mountainside above a deep ravine, and was so narrow that two horsemen could scarcely pass each other upon it. After winding around the mountainside, the trail passed over low hills and level ground, where Utcha would have a decided advantage in the race to the chapel.

The pursuers must have appreciated this fact, for just as Utcha entered the narrow way, one of their number left the trail and started straight across the mountain higher up. Evidently he intended to strike the trail on the other side and head her off. Utcha was fully conscious of his purpose, and urged her horse forward in a supreme effort to reach the lower hills beyond. Arriving at the apex of the trail, she looked down only to see that she was too late; the dreaded Hechicero was waiting in the trail not more than a hundred feed ahead.

But Utcha never slackened pace. Pressing her knees close to her horse's sides and leaning forward, she held the reins loosely over her horse's head, and rushed him headlong down the trail straight at her adversary. Frightened at the coming onslaught, the Hechicero's horse became unmanageable, and in an effort to avoid the threatened impact reared high in the air, and, as he reared, turned on his hind legs as if to go back, leaving a narrow opening between his body and the bluff. As he stood there poised in this position, Utcha's horse going at break-neck speed through the opening thus made, struck him a grazing blow, hurling him and his rider headlong over the precipice into the deep ravine.

By the time the other horsemen appeared, Utcha had reached the lower hills. So they gave up the chase, and waited for their comrades on foot to come up.

It was early morning when Utcha reached the station and gave the warning. Miguel at once took her to the chapel, as it was the safest from attack. Then hastily dispatching a runner to San Gabriel for assistance, he ordered his men, four in number, to move provisions from the storehouse to the chapel, and to lay in a supply of water. Miguel himself fastened and barricaded the gates of the adobe-walled corral surrounding the station and chapel. Finally all took refuge in the chapel, and barricaded the doors as best they could. There with only two old muskets and a very scant supply of ammunition, they awaited the siege.

By this time the Indians had come up in force, and were loudly demanding the surrender of Utcha. Some attacked the gates, while others tried to scale the walls, but after a few had been killed by shots from the muskets, they fell back and waited for night. When darkness set in, they renewed the attack and gained an entrance. After plundering and setting fire to the storehouse, they attacked the chapel. Armed with stones, butts of trees, and clubs, the infuriated savages battered and rammed the walls, and hammered and beat the door of the chapel. Driven back by shots from the muskets, they would return while the muskets were being reloaded, and renew the attack again and again. At last the door gave way, and the savages commenced discharging flights of arrows and throwing burning coals into the chapel.

It was then that Miguel and his little band, running out of ammunition, decided to make a dash through the door and attempt an escape. Utcha was kneeling at the altar praying before a small statue of San Bernardino, which rested on a bracket in the wall above the altar. Miguel put his arm around her and drew her to him.

"Come, my heart, we must flee," he said. "It is our only chance."

Looking up in a dazed way, she saw that the altar was on fire.

"But we cannot leave the Saint," she replied. "We must take him with us; he will surely save us."

Miguel took the statue down from the bracket and placed it in her arms. Then with his arm around her, he advanced toward the door with his men, who were forcing the mob back with the muskets. Afraid of the muskets, the savages in front receded, but were soon pushed forward again by the mob behind. With their rude stone knives raised to strike, the savages were coming on again, when one of them happened to see the statue in Utcha's arms. Trembling with fear, he dropped his knife and turned in flight.

"The Saint! The Saint!" he cried. "San Bernardino!"

The Indians, who had often heard the padres tell of the many miracles performed through the intervention of the patron saint of the chapel, believed that the statue itself possessed supernatural powers. Alarmed by the cry of their comrade, they became panic-stricken, and, taking up the cry as the statue was borne nearer, commenced a mad scramble to get out of the chapel. Backing, pushing, crowding, shoving, they were soon outside.

In vain the frenzied old Hechicero tried to rally them. "It is only a piece of wood," he shouted. "We will burn it with Utcha as a sacrifice."

At last, maddened by his loss of control over the savages, the Hechicero seized a spear and rushed furiously at Utcha as she appeared in the doorway with the statue still in her arms. As he came on with uplifted spear, a large wooden cross standing on the coping above the door, loosened by the battering of the wall, suddenly fell, and, striking him full upon the head, bore him bleeding and dying to the ground.

To the awe-stricken savages it was the vengeance of San Bernardino, and they fled swiftly and silently into the night; while Miguel and Utcha, with the beloved statue in her arms, passed out of the burning chapel unmolested on the way to San Gabriel.

GEORGE HAZEN SHINN.

Admitted to Parliament.

Judge George F. Lawton of the Middlesex Probate Court told me a story the other day of an American minister who was spending his sabbatical year traveling abroad. Arriving in London, he made every effort to get an intimate view of the two branches of Parliament in session. Of course no stranger is allowed on the floor of the House of Lords, but the minister not knowing this, and with the usual amount of American push, tried to make his way in. There is a rule, however, that servants of the various lords may be admitted to speak to their masters. Seeing the minister walking boldly in, the doorkeeper asked:

"What lord do you serve?"

"What lord?" repeated the astonished American, "the Lord Jehovah!"

For a moment the doorkeeper hesitated, and then admitted him. Turning to an assistant standing near, he said:

"He must mean one of those poor Scotch lairds."—[Boston Record.

THE OLD SETTLER TELLS OF JIM'S WAY OF GETTING A SURPLUS.

By a Special Contributor.

THE old settler dropped the newspaper to the porch floor and tipped his chair against the wall. "Them city chaps seem to think they have the cinch on smartness! They don't allow as we country people know beans in the pot," he began with a touch of tartness in his mellow old voice. "They think their little traps fer catchin' fools are dizzy schemes, and—they may send a man up fer swindlin' some poor devil out o' his little pile, but they feel that he's a bird, just the same. Why," and he waved a contemptuous hand, "them sure-thing gamblers and phony real estate men ain't a circumstance to Jim Sutton and his easy way o' gatherin' a surplus!

"He's a country lad—never lived in town in his life, though he's built a swell house in the city now, and his wife lives in it, and she and the girls goes into society. But Jim—he stays right in his little ol' country store at the cross-roads jest the same—'cept when he's travelin' or layin' his political fences or supervisin'—he's one o' the county Board o' Supervisors.

"He come into this country on his feet, with a pack on his back. Ol' Cap Jennings hired him as a clerk in the store, at 50 cents a day an' his board. Cap was too fond o' drinkin' his own licker—inside o' three years Sutton owned that store an'-ol' Cap was a-clerkin' for him. Jim's made money out o' that store ever sence. He's give pretty nigh anybody credit—and then charged 10 per cent. interest on all bills that run over six months. He owns a pretty good slice o' the township now. You see, dry years the Mexicans and the poor cusses that didn't have nothin' but their ranches to depend on, got in so deep that they couldn't never get out—they ate up their ranches—that was all.

"But that wasn't Jim's star 'get-rich-quick' scheme—that was slow! They ain't much o' anything that Sutton hasn't dipped into one time and another. He's grubstaked a lot o' prospectors, first an' last, though none of 'em has ever made a real big strike. An' stocked one or two ranches and handles a good deal o' live stock. He's always taken eggs an' butter an' sich in trade—chargin' the top price for his flour and sugar and payin' the bottom one fer the produce. He's bought up most o' the barley an' feed as it come along an' stored it till he could git his price. They wasn't nothin' too small fer him to traffick in—he'd buy manzanita roots by the sack as the Mexicans and Indians brung 'em down from the cañons—and when he'd got a carload he'd ship 'em an' make money.

"One o' the best strikes he ever made was when he went in with French Pete on a mining deal. Pete was a Basque sheep herder. One time he come from the back country with a promising bit o' rock. He showed it to Sutton, an' Jim sent it to an assayer. That was good stuff, and Sutton put up the money, and Pete—he done the work, an' they was equal partners in all the claims that looked good. That was the beginning of the Red Rock Mining District. It run on fer several years. Pete wasn't no fool—he had the partnership papers all drawed up correct an' he stayed on the ground and worked and run the force—sometimes they kept several men at work. They took out consid'r'ble gold and they sold off a couple o' claims—got two thousand apiece fer 'em, Pete told me once. You see, I used to run a big band o' sheep in my day," the old settler paused and looked off to the bare, brown hills that had once resounded with the blatant, persistent calls of the flocks, but were now bare and silent. "The herders was mostly French, and I savied enough of their talk to understand. Pete used to come to me—to talk things over. He was a bright fellow—fer a Basque, but he never did git so he was just sure of his English—and he was always a little afraid Sutton might 'do' him—mebbe I did kind o' father that idee myself"—the old settler admitted the suggestion with a smile that ended in a sigh, "but it didn't do no good in the end.

"Well, it run on for four or five years and then—Pete died. He was a-coming down from the mine with the burros. It was a long trip across the range, and he got caught in a heavy rain and had to lay out over night. He was used to that, but it was all-fired cold and he got chilled in the snow that come along toward mornin', and then, when he got down to the store, the house was full an' he had to sleep in the barn. He was took with pneumony, and in three days he was dead. I went down to see him when I heard he was sick—he was pretty nigh gone then, but he knew me, and he whispered: 'My sisters—they will have it all—my money and my mine—you see!'" That was all the will he left.

"Sutton was app'inted administrator of the estate—he was the party boss in that section o' the county, an' he always got all the little snaps like that comin' along. And right there was where Jim Sutton made the trusts look mild an' the city promoters kind o' green an' amatoorish. He jest naturally gathered in all the jobs; he was jedge or clerk at every election that come; he was viewer fer all the road work in that part o' the country, an' he was special inspector or committeeman fer all sorts o' things. When he wanted a trip East, the county paid his expenses as our representative to a good roads convention; an' when he wanted to go to Sacramento or 'Frisco, he went as a member o' the committee on preservin' game, or purchasin' a safe fer the Courthouse—er something else that couldn't be did without his presence. One o' his brothers was a deputy Sheriff an' another was the county bee inspector, an' his sister had a job as copyist in the Courthouse.

"Yes, you see, Sutton could land the votes o' his district solid. Between the men that was owin' him and the men that was hopin' fer favors from him, and the Mexicans that swore by him because he always treated 'em to sour wine and cigarettes jest before election, an' the men that was afraid o' his pull—he had a dead cinch! An' Jim always acted kind o' free and easy—was a good fellow among the boys. And they was times when he did some poor cuss a good turn—we'll give the devil his due—an' so they let him work 'em an' never complained—for the most part.

"Well, when poor Pete turned his toes to the daisies it was a matter o' course that Sutton, being his partner, should be app'inted administrator. I told him what Pete had said to me, and he said: 'Sure! When the debts is paid, the balance of the estate will go to his relatives. I've already wrote to them to establish their claim.' I thought I'd better write to 'em, too, and I had two or three letters from a French lawyer that thought he could write English. It took all the linguists in the country to read them letters, and we never did know just plumb what they said—but the papers was all right, and Jim never disputed their claim. Only when he got through administering and had paid all the debts, which I never could find out jest what they was or who they was owin' to, there was $850 to be sent to the sisters. They was disapp'inted, fer Pete had led 'em to think he was a rich man, they said—but everything had been done accordin' to law—an'—that was the end of it. Sutton said Pete was owing about $3000, and his half o' the mine wasn't worth more'n $4000; but in less than a year he sold a half-interest in that mine fer $9000—and he's taking gold out his share yet.

"That was the beginnin'. Two years after that, ol' John Hugus was found dead. Hugus had been our county 'hermit' sense 'way back in the eightjes. He come in here—a fine-lookin' man—about 40—looked like a city man—a doctor or lawyer or some kind o' professional. He took up a government claim in Rattlesnake Cañon—mighty pretty piece o' land, with a bench o' mesa and some fine oaks and a kind o' cienega with two springs that was good for fifty inches in an ordinary year. It was a powerful lonesome place, though, shut in tight all around, and the road a terror—had to do a good deal o' blastin' to get a wagon up there at all, and four miles, at least, to the nearest ranch.

"But Hugus didn't seem to mind that. He put up a shack and began to improve his place—cleared up his sink and put in alfalfa, and set out orange trees on the mesa that he could get water on. When he wasn't workin' he was readin'. He took slews o' papers and magazines and his shack was runnin' over with books. He used to come out once in two weeks fer his mail and groceries; the rest o' the time he kept to himself. At first, there was a lot o' talk, and two or three times detectives went up there to see if he was the man they was lookin' fer; but they was off the track. And nobody ever did find out anything agenst the man or about his past. He never talked about himself, though he was good comp'ny enough when he met ye on the road or at the store or anybody ever made a excuse to drift inter his place.

"He died up there alone—nobody ever knew jest how or when. They found a will amongst his papers, leavin' everything to his daughter and giving her name and address—Mrs. Somebody, in New York City. He had improved his place until it was a fine piece of property and he had picked up several other little ranches and pieces of land at one time and another—mostly when somebody got so hard up they had to get out. It was all worth in the neighborhood o' $20,000 as prices ran then.

"It was some time before they could get any trace of the woman, and then she give orders to sell everything. Sutton had been app'inted administrator, and, well, it was all done accordin' to law. The sale was advertised, but it was winter, and the roads was bad the weather threatenin'. They was only one bidder, and he bid in the whole property fer $6000. In less'n a year it was all recorded in Sutton's name, an' two years ago he sold the Rattlesnake ranch for $12,000, and he has three or four hundred acres left.

"And now he's administerin' on the San José rancho—1000 acres as pretty a piece o' land as there is in the State of California. Ol' Señora Maria Garcia held onto that place in spite o' lawyers and land sharks and worthless sons and sons-in-law, for fifty years—there wasn't a man left in the family when she died last year—and so—the court app'inted an administrator.

"No!" and the old man brought his chair down on four legs and straightened up, "your city promoters an' specilators may make more to a haul—but fer stiddy, dead-sure operating, they ain't in it with country Jakes like Jim Sutton."

ROSE L. ELLERBE.

A Chromatic Love Affair.

"Marooned!" muttered the villain, turning white and striking his forehead.

Violet, pearl of women had refused him again.

He lapsed into a brown study, wondering if he were too green to win any woman's love. Perhaps she objected to his prematurely gray hair. Or could it be that the cardinal virtues of his rival outweighed his old gold?

The hero, entering, black as a thunder cloud, readily solved the mystery.

"There's a yellow streak in you!" he cried. "In the hope of winning my betrothed, Violet, you have jilted Alice, and it has made Alice blue!"

The villain rose, madder than a hornet, purpling with rage beneath his tan. But before he could speak, the hero had pinked him with his sword.

Violet screamed. Terror caught-'er.

But her lover soothed her.

"Red of him at last," he murmured, folding her in his arms and kissing her cherry lips, as the crimson sun sank in the west, partially obscured by the London smoke.

The Latent Spark.

AN EPISODE OF A BURGLAR AND A BABY.

By a Special Contributor.

THE street-car slid noisily along, humming [illegible] harsh disconnected song of its journey, frequen[tly] interrupted, by stops at the street corners, to [admit] perspiring town-bound passengers. For March [had] produced an unexpected "hot spell" in the South[ern] California town. And women in hastily "done [over] last-year's organdies, and those in their latest-[cut] spring suits, alike eagerly sought the breezy [outside] seats. Among those sitting outside were two pas[sen]gers to whom you would have given a second glan[ce] had you been there. A little mother clasping a [baby] tightly in her arms, with a somewhat defiant and very resolute expression in her doll-like eyes, sat [with] important responsibility expressed in every line of [her] body. Had she not been solemnly warned by the [baby's] papa and the baby's grandmamma, as to the extra[ordinary] danger of bringing baby out without nurse? And [dur]ing braved the possible accident and their displeas[ure] it was necessary to be extra careful, and prove [how] utterly absurd had been their fears.

"For what could be more simple," argued the [little] mother, "than to take baby downtown and buy her bonnet and come right back?—and nurse can't go, it's her afternoon out."

So there they sat, Mother with a feeling of [delicious] naughty triumph, and Baby with no feeling at all on the subject, for she had scarcely lived a year in the world of ours and was untroubled by its complexities. She retained the heaven of her infancy, and the trailing clouds of glory still enwrapped her, also spotless with raiment, the dainty simplicity of which testified to the sufficiency of her lot, as, too, did the appearance of her mother.

A man swung himself heavily on to the fast-[moving] car. Tall, powerful, unkempt was he, and brought with him an unsavory atmosphere. He threw himself into the vacant space by the mother, which was the only one left outside, and she drew her baby and her skirts further from him as he did so. Had she been given insight as to who and what the man really was, in the moment when she did realize that he wasn't at all nice she undoubtedly would have left him in sole possession of the whole of that seat. For he was a perfect specimen of the parasite family—one who made his precarious living by stealing the earnings of others. A burglar, in short, and he seated himself by that [vision of] perfection of babyness and her not unworthy mate.

But baby, not of this world and unable to use its standards, saw nothing amiss in the near proximity of this ugly creature. Close inspection of the ten [perfect]ated pink cameos they called toes (bared to the [cooling] breezes of this southern climate,) ceased, and [her] large, round, blue eyes were raised, destiny turned on glance of the burglar to meet that of the baby. A twinkle came into the blue, a wrinkle to the little nose and the red mouth widened in a smile which grew [until] two little sharp, white teeth were visible—then a sudden return to seriousness and a wide-eyed scrutiny of no trace of disapproval in it—and again the smile. A heaven in baby's soul sought the heaven in the man and found it. Found what nobody else had ever found—perhaps because nobody else had ever looked for. Her eyes fell right on the one little speck of gold in this dross, the latent spark of good in this bad man. It was impossible to resist that smile. Unconsciously the man's unshaven cheeks fell into deep, unaccustomed wrinkles as he murmured involuntarily: "Cute little kid."

Ashamed and puzzled by the emotion that suddenly swept through him, the burglar turned away and tried to direct his thoughts from this sudden bewildering sunbeam of sweetness that had shone across his wonted gloom. But somehow, wherever he looked the vision of that engaging baby face with the wondrous smile for him, danced before his mind's eye. Nothing in his thirty years of life had ever seemed so pure and ingly sweet. But the gush of tenderness that filled [him] for a brief space soon left him disgusted and [ashamed] and when a small soft palm and five outspread fingers with a corresponding row of dimples, were laid on his coat sleeve, he drew his arm away rather roughly, nearly as quickly as the watchful mother withdrew her hand. It was too late now for a thing like that to affect him. Had a little human love entered his life earlier, that spark of good, of which he was conscious for the first time, might have developed. A sense of almost rage filled him as he reflected that he had never had a chance of decency. A life of crime was his inheritance, and he had assumed it without question of the possibility of a better one.

The car was clanging its way through the busy mid-town, when the mother rose at a particularly crowded corner. As she left the lower step, strength and courage alike deserted her. A drayman saw his opportunity to drive between the car and traffic that filled the rest of that side of the street, and was about to seize it, when the hoarse shriek of a siren told him that an impatient chauffeur was going to cut in ahead of him. All this bewildered the little mother. She decided to run in front of the dray, but stopped half-way at the sound of the motor horn. Then losing control of her ideas, gasping and clutching the baby wildly, in a panic she began that fatal dodging to and forth, fearfully conscious of hoarse shouts, directions impatiently hurled at her: "Go ahead!" waving a striped parasol and shrieking hysterically: "They're going to be killed! My God! they're going to be killed!" That second of time charged with such imminent danger lengthened out into ages of suffering for the frightened, remorseful woman. Suddenly she felt two firm hands upon her, and she was lifted up by strong arms. A way seemed to clear miraculously before a dominant will, and she and the baby were deposited safe and sound on the edge of the pavement.

"Oh, they told me not to come out alone, and I'll never do it again!" were her first gasped-out words. Then she turned to her rescuer, who had paused to make a peculiar clucking noise to the baby, in an ineffectual effort to reassure her, for she had shared somewhat, though uncomprehendingly, in the general alarm. The mother was surprised to recognize her late repulsive neighbor in her preserver.

"Oh, how good you are! You've saved my life and baby's. What can I do to repay you? Anything! You may ask anything. I mean it." Her eyes were lifted anxiously to his face. She hoped so earnestly that he would ask a great deal in reward, feeling vaguely that only in that way could she make amends for that first hasty impression she had formed of him.

The man stood hesitatingly before her. He tilted his hat backward and scratched the front of his head, then forward and scratched the back of his head, and when at last he spoke, he felt like the old woman in the nursery rhyme—"Oh, lawk-a-mercy on us, this is none of I!" For it couldn't possibly be Jim Blake (with many aliases) saying:

"I want work. Any kind would do. I thought p'r'aps—could you—could you help me to get it?"

"Oh, yes, of course—but that would be nothing at all. Mr. Harris will send you a check, and I can give you work at my own home. We need a gardener, a sort of undergardener, and to help with some of the heavy housework, such as beating carpets and——"

She had unconsciously assumed the air of the lady in the intelligence office describing a situation to be filled, and the affair began to lose interest for busy people, so the crowd dispersed. The intelligence-office manner chilled the man's not very firm purpose.

"I guess," he said slowly, "I guess that would about let me out—the carpet beating. It wouldn't hardly satisfy the upper yearnings of my nater."

Mrs. Harris, when telling her husband about it later, said that he had a rather sarcastic manner just then. But she answered him sweetly enough.

"Well, Mr. Harris employs a great many men. I am sure he could give you something. Please let me send you to him. Anyway, take my card—and will you give me your address?"

"No—that is—I don't need no reward, I guess. I guess I ain't done nothing that that there baby's smile ain't more'n paid for——" And he walked away with the lumbering gait he assumed for purposes of disguise. In telling Mr. Harris about it later, Mrs. Harris said: "What could I do? I couldn't run after him. So he had to go unrewarded. I'm so sorry; I somehow feel that he needed help badly."

"I wonder why he's out of work in these good times?" said the baby's papa.

Late that night, while baby slept snug in her little basket, the burglar was trudging along a country road—a road stretching up to a dark, imposing wall of mountain, which seemed to intersect it. The rhythmic sweep of that dusky outline against the sky reaching as far as could the eye on either side, the deep solemn mystery of the Sierras, gave a thrill of dignity and grandeur to the quiet valley. On either side of the road lay extensive vineyards, the monotonous regularity of the gnarled stumps of the vines broken here and there by a graceful oak, left by respectful hands, a touch of beauty in the midst of industry. The night was dark, warm and oppressively silent. The breath from the mountains came heavy with sage brush and the pungent scent from the sycamores in the cañon.

Our friend the burglar tramped along the dusty road through the shadow of a double row of pepper trees which formed an arch of green over the highway. His head was bent and he seemed to be thinking deeply. At last he stopped in the shade of an ancient row of cypress trees, which in their youth had formed a verdant hedge, but which now vied with a neighboring eucalyptus in height. Almost immediately he was joined by a short, wiry man, masked and slouch-hatted, who seemed to have sprung up out of nowhre. They walked together in silence for a few moments. The robbery of a little grocery store with a postoffice attachment was the project in hand. The said grocery and a rival, a meat market and blacksmith shop, scattered among Mexican dwellings and few superior cottages, made up the lonely village. Great ranches stretched from it in all directions. At last our burglar spoke, or rather blurted out:

"Well, pard, I guess you'll have to see this thing through by yourself."

"Why, 's game queered?"

"For me it is."

"Why?"

"I dunno—can't make out what's come over me. I can't break into that store, that's all."

"What's the matter? Got religion?" sneeringly.

"I dunno. Somethin' kinder like it, I guess. Blame if I can tell what's come over me; only somethin' has, an' somehow I'm just sick of the business."

"Yer afeared!"

"Ain't afeared o' nothin' but me. I tell yer I couldn't go through with it. Why, pard, I'd be calling the cop 'less yer could get the burglar-proof safe open. It couldn't be safe fer me, feelin' as I do, to undertake it. But fer you, you just go ahead and win. You're welcome to the work I've put on it so far, and I guess it's a dead easy job, and a pretty good haul, too."

"You think I'd run my neck into a noose like that, Jim Blake? I see myself! Looks mighty as though you was going to split on me!"

"No, I ain't. But I won't persuade yer. Comin' back my way? No? By-bye."

"Aw, Jim, you ain't really goin' to quit the game? You! Why, you've pulled off some of the best things ever done."

"I know it, God help me!" There was anguish in his tone. "But I ain't never killed no one, an' I guess I can begin now an' do some good things to kinder square up all the bad ones."

Then he turned abruptly, ashamed of this show of emotion before his companion, and with a short "Good-night," hurried away.

"Dargarn if I don't feel better already!" said Jim, as he hurried to the mile-distant car line. "Guess I'll have to go and beat them carpets some for a start."

And he did beat the Harris's carpets, but not for long, for the spark of good developed fast and soon drew him up to better things.

Good Words for the Gator.

SCIENCE FINDS HIM A USEFUL CITIZEN OF THE SOUTH.

From New York Sun.

TWENTY years ago a visitor to that part of the South below North Carolina could see alligators in almost every stream and bayou, but now one may frequently spend months traveling through this region and not see a single alligator except those in captivity. The killing of the creatures for sport or for their hides has been the main cause of their great decrease in numbers. In addition thousands of the young have been killed or shipped away, while enormous numbers of the eggs have been gathered and sold as curios.

It was not until about 1855 that the demand for alligator leather became of importance. The market was not long continued. In 1869 fashion again called for the leather for manufacturing into fancy slippers, traveling bags, belts, card cases, music rolls, etc. The demand has continued to the present, and many thousands of the animals have been killed, while the preparation of the skins has given employment to hundreds of people.

The output of the tanneries of this country approximates 275,000 skins annually, worth about $425,000, part of which come from Mexico and Central America. It is estimated that about 3,800,000 alligators were killed in Florida alone between 1880 and 1909, nearly 20,000 being killed in 1908.

The earliest settlers in the Southern States found alligators, or, as they were then called, crocodiles, exceedingly abundant in almost all streams, especially in Florida and Louisiana. Many marvelous tales are found in the early chronicles of the ravages of these monsters. They were said to eat dogs and pigs and to consider the negro an especially succulent tidbit, while it was considered dangerous to go into streams where they were known to exist. When such a stream had to be crossed hours were spent sometimes in beating it to frighten off the alligators.

The researches of scientists have shown that there is very slight foundation for such stories, and it is probable that the greater number of the pigs lost by the planters could have been traced to other enemies, particularly the two-footed kind, while runaway slaves would naturally encourage the belief that alligators had dined off them.

The greater part of the supply of alligator leather now comes from Florida, and owing to excessive hunting, the industry is profitable only in the central part of the peninsula, in what is called the Lake Okeechobee region and in the Everglades. Here the principal hunters are Seminole Indians, who have their homes on hummocks far back in the Everglades and come to the settlements only when in need of articles which they cannot produce themselves.

The alligator is most active at night and its days are usually spent lying on some low bank or log overhanging the water, where it can enjoy the warmth of the sun and be able to retreat to its native element at the first sign of danger. While on land alligators are very clumsy, in the water they are exceedingly active, and being strong swimmers are able to catch the larger fish with but slight trouble. For animals like the muskrat and otter swimming across lagoons, they are always on the watch.

On seizing its prey, the alligator sinks with it to the bottom, and there remains until all struggling has ceased; it is then able with less effort to tear it into pieces. While thus submerged, a peculiar collar at the base of the tongue prevents the water from passing into its lungs.

While the alligator is said to make very effective use of its tail in warfare, the widely-disseminated story that it uses its tail to sweep animals off the banks into its jaws appears to have but slight foundation in fact.

In April or May the mother alligator seeks a sheltered spot on a bank and there builds a small mound with a hole in the middle. The foundation of this mound is of mud and grass, and on these she lays some eggs. She then covers the eggs with another stratum of grass and mud, upon which she deposits some more eggs. Thus she proceeds until she has laid from twenty-five to sixty eggs. The eggs are hatched out by the sun.

As soon as they have chipped the shell, the baby alligators are led to the water by the mother, who provides them with food, which she disgorges. Papa Alligator has to be carefully watched at this time, for he highly esteems a dinner of young saurians, and is not particular whether they are his own or his neighbor's children. When by strategy or downright fighting the mother has got her family safely into their natural element, it is not long before the young scatter, each to begin life on his own hook. At this period they form a favorite food for turtles and the larger fishes.

When fully grown, the alligator is about sixteen fee in length. In the adult stage it is greenish black above having lost the yellowish color bands that belong to it earlier years. Hunters say that alligators grow ver slowly, attaining the first year a length they ar said to be from ten to fifteen years old, while thos twelve feet long are supposed to be 75 or more. Thei normal life is estimated at from 100 to 150 years.

Alligator hunting originally began as sport. Thei some one tanned the skin and found that it could b put to commercial use. Carried on as it must be, a night, the hunt is picturesque.

In many places, the hunters fasten bicycle lamps o their caps, and when the animal is attracted by th light, pick it off by hitting it in the eye with a rifle ball Torches are often used. Sometimes the hunter lure the alligator to the surface of the water by "telephonin to the gator," as it is called.

An alligator is always attracted by the peculiar grunt which the young alligators make, for there is no sort o food they love better than newly-hatched gator. The hunter takes a long, slender pole and lets one end of it down very quietly into the water. The other end he places between his teeth and imitates the grunt of the baby gators. The old fellows easily hear the call and come up to feast on the babies they think are there.

In catching them alive, hunters frequently lasso them while asleep on the bank or on a log. When asleep in their holes in the mud they are occasionally drawn out by means of an iron hook. These holes are easily found. Sometimes the grass is set afire and the animals lassoed as they seek the water.

After the alligator is caught, the hunter in sport sometimes mounts it, using the reptile's fore feet and legs as reins. It is needless to say that it is only by the exercise of considerable skill that the hunter keeps his seat through the struggles of the reptile, and if care is not used, the fun may develop into tragedy.

Alligators three feet and more in length are generally killed at once and the hide removed. All of the hide except the ridge of the back, which is very bony, is used. The hide is salted, and is then in condition for sale to the buyers, who are usually storekeepers, who furnish provisions and ammunition in exchange.

The hides range in value to the hunter from 20 cents for a three-foot hide to $1.25 for a hide seven feet or more in length. The five and six-foot hides are the most desirable, as the larger hides have a hard piece of bone in the square checks on the hide, and it is impossible to sew through this. Nearly all of the tanning is done at Newark, N. J.

Young alligators are often brought in, and these are worth about 8 cents apiece. The eggs are also gathered, and sell for 2½ cents each. They are mainly sold to curio dealers, who either hatch them out or blow them and sell the shells. Most of the small alligators are stuffed and sold as curios to tourists, who pay from 50 cents to $2 apiece for them.

Many of them used to be shipped North alive by tourists as presents. Owing to ignorance as to how the animal should be cared for, many of these soon died.

If properly cared for, the young alligator will thrive even in unnatural circumstances. Its main requirement is sufficient heat. Its diet should consist of bits of fresh meat, insects and worms. They often show great fondness for the ordinary earthworms, and will frequently refuse all food but these. The larger specimens in captivity are fed about three times a week on fresh meat or small live animals, and they require little attention other than this.

Alligators' teeth, which are secured by burying the head until they have rotted out, are of fine ivory and valued for carving into ornaments. They are worth to the hunter about $2 a pound—from fifty to seventy-five teeth. The dealers will not buy very many of them, as there is but a limited demand. At one time, the paws were saved and mounted as curios, but it is impossible to do anything with them now.

Both flesh and eggs are eaten by a few persons, but it requires a very hardy stomach to stand the disagreeable, musky odor. There is nothing better, hunters declare, than the tip of the tail of an alligator which has reached, say, the pullet period. It is creamy in color, tasting a little like frogs' legs, but with a more pronounced gamy flavor, juicy—altogether tempting. The dish is a great favorite with the Crackers of Florida.

Alligator tails are best at the time of the rice bird season. The big alligators float in the water with only their eyes showing. When an alligator gets near a flock of these fat, juicy little birds, it dives to the bottom. Its long wide snout scoops up some of the loam, and it floats to the surface again with just the rich soil showing.

The birds think it is an island. They alight upon it. When the whole family is there, the big beast turns suddenly. Just as the birds scramble off the alligator opens its mouth once. They are gone.

The birds are neat little feeders, and the alligator is an epicure at this time of the year. The rice-bird diet makes the tip of its tail tender and sweet.

In St. Augustine is an alligator farm, another being at the Hot Springs, in Arkansas. Here the alligators are kept in confinement until large enough for market.

It will probably be news to many that Florida has a representative of the crocodile family. This animal was first supposed to be confined to the West Indies and South America, but it has been occasionally captured on the peninsula of Florida. It is easily distinguishable from the alligator by its narrow snout. For many years scientists were skeptical of reports from Florida of the appearance of this animal in that State, but the capture of several fine specimens in recent years has settled all doubt.

The Lily-American War.

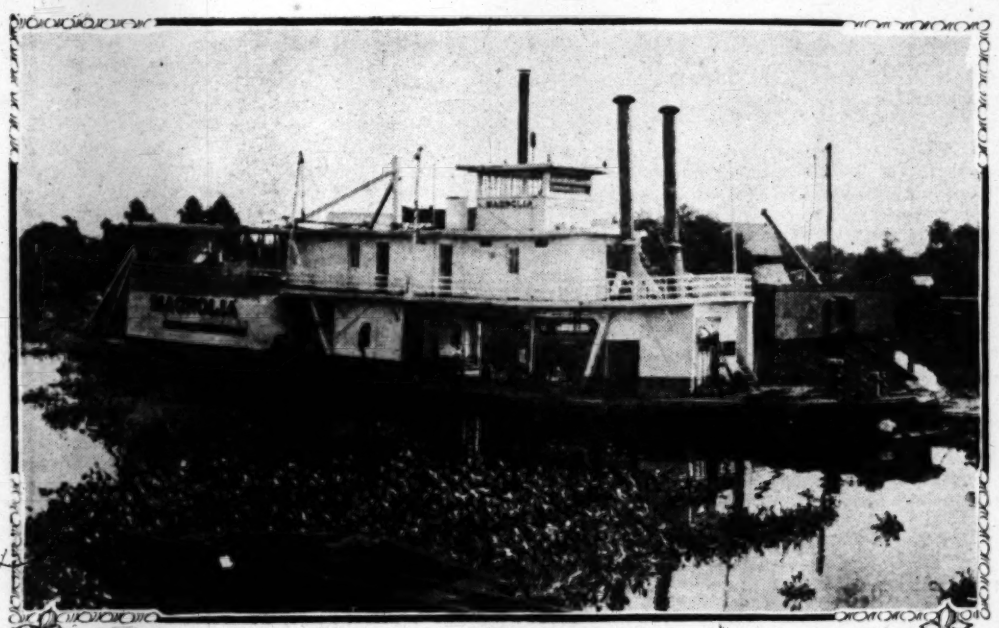
How the Government Fights to Clear Louisiana Streams.

By a Special Contributor.

WHAT are the most expensive lilies in the world?

Not some rare importation from oriental lands, neither the pride of an exclusive florist shop, nor the magnum opus of far-famed horticultural gardens, but just the ordinary water hyacinth of Louisiana, too common even to be given away, and beautiful as it is, the pest of the Pelican State.

Millions upon millions, they have sprung up in the navigable streams, until in some instances they have formed a compact bridge over which not only men may walk with perfect safety, but even cows can cross from bank to bank with equal ease. So much did they obstruct the streams that one of the largest lumber mills of the State was compelled to close for six weeks at a cost of $2000, for no logs could be driven down until the bayou was, in a measure, cleared.



U.S. Steamboat Magnolia cleaning out water hyacinth

Bayou in Louisiana obstructed by water hyacinth

Unable to compete with a necromancer that so quickly and easily converts a flowing stream into a compact solid, the State appealed to the government for aid in removing these obstructions to navigation, and already over $100,000 has been expended for the purpose. Yet still the lilies grow.

In 1899, when the sinister march of the pest was beginning to be seriously felt, a boat and log booms were constructed for the purpose of clearing out the lilies, but in 1902 a modification of the Rivers and Harbors Act permitted of their extermination, as much as possible, by the use of chemicals. Since then, much has been accomplished, but at terrific cost, while much remains to be done. Several boats have been outfitted for this purpose and have operated in Bayou des Allemands, Bayou Barataria, Bayou Plaquemine, Bayou Grosse Tete, Calcasieu River, Cow Bayou, Sabine River and Lake, and the Morgan City route.

As Californians spray the orange groves to rid them of deadly pests, so these streams are sprayed by the boats to exterminate the plant foes of State navigation. A solution of arsenic and plain washing soda is the potent destroyer. When the spray was first used, it was believed that a mixture of saltpeter with the arsenic would bring about best results; but since cattle along the banks were attracted to the dead lilies because of the saltpeter and, after gorging on them, sickened or died, the saltpeter had to be omitted. The present formula is recommended by the Department of Agriculture. One gallon of it will kill ten square yards of hyacinths, and in the raw state the materials that compose this amount cost the State only one-half cent.

Just the lightest spray is fatal to the hyacinth—or any other land or water vegetation, for that matter—but is absolutely harmless to water life. The crews on the boats catch and eat fish from the very streams which they are spraying.

Though so hard to uproot from the stream while living, the dead hyacinths are easily dealt with. Being 98 per cent. water, they turn to slime upon being thrown on the banks, then later become merely piles of dry wisps. At the beginning of the work it was thought that much nitrogen was stored in the plant and that it might be profitably utilized, but experiments later proved that there was not sufficient of this gas in the lily's make-up to pay for its extraction, and so all thought of turning the plant to commercial value was abandoned.

While the sharp nose of a boat usually can force a path for itself through the mass of lilies, some portions of the bayous have been so dense that two boats had to be lashed together to force an opening, and when work was begun on Bayou des Allemands, twelve solid miles of lilies instead of that amount of water confronted John Klorer, United States junior engineer, who is in local charge of the work. Of the government boats, the Ramos is the best equipped for the work, being furnished with a long boom in her prow on the end of which a member of the crew sits and operates a hose with a fine spray attachment so that places inaccessible to other boats can be reached by the Ramos.

Other United States steamboats are the Hyacinth and the Magnolia, while the Louisiana Cypress Lumber Company and the Des Allemands Lumber Company have fitted out steamers with tanks for boiling the solution and contrivances for spraying it and have materially assisted with the work. Various lumber companies affected by the obstructed streams are also joining the crusade and Mr. Klorer feels that the government project will never be successfully carried out until it is given the full coöperation of all residents as well as the mills and factories of the infected districts. He also holds that however much damage the great spring floods may do in other ways, they assist him greatly by flushing the infected bayous and washing blocks of lilies into mid-stream.

The Ramos was the first boat furnished by the government, but it being insufficient for the great amount of work, others were added. The expense of maintaining these boats varies from month to month, but the average cost is about $2000. The appropriations each year have been from $15,000 to $25,000, and the operation of the boats, the project's portion of office expenses, the wages of the men and the cost of the solution have consumed every penny.

The use of log booms has greatly prevented the further spread of the lilies. These barriers are built across the mouths of small streams that intersect the bayous and thus prevent the plant from being carried into the clear waters by the wind and tide. Where stagnant, lily-laden streams join larger bodies of water, booms and even ropes are placed to quarantine, as it were, the unaffected waters. These booms are also very useful in urging masses of lilies downstream; placed behind a great section of the moving plant, it presses it forward and prevents it retracing its steps, thus leaving a clear stream in its wake. This method is being painstakingly followed in Bayou des Allemands, and it is hoped eventually to force all the lilies from this stream into Lake Salvador.

One of the great difficulties that the warriors on the lilies have to encounter is the continued spread of the pest by ordinary navigation. Boats or log rafts passing through infected districts can scarcely prevent the lodgment of lily seeds in their seams and clefts, and these, deposited later in clear waters, spring into instant life and another lily jam is effected.

Then, too, boatmen and log hunters passing from stream to stream will often raise the quarantine barrier to pass and neglect to replace it properly, and thus the lily finds its way into new waters, ever establishing a colony and fighting tenaciously to hold the ground already won.

At Indian Village, considered one of the strategic points, a watchman guards the barrier across the bayou, and every raftsman coming from the infected tributaries is compelled to clear his craft or his logs of all clinging hyacinths before entering the clear water, for it is in the swamps where the logs are secured that the plant thrives so luxuriantly as well as in the little coolies or streams where the water is too shallow for the spraying boats to be operated.

Blockades of lilies are often a serious menace to the bridges that cross the bayous. One such occurred around the log boom of the Des Allemands Lumber Company, and pressed with so great force against a Southern Pacific bridge as to render it unstable. To relieve the bridge soon enough to prevent great damage was the problem. A cross-cut saw was brought into action, and a great square of the compact plant measuring about six feet was sawed away by two men standing on the main mass of lilies. The amputated portion floated away and the strain on the bridge and the crush on the log pens was relieved.

The legend of the introduction of the hyacinth plague into Louisiana is interesting if not well vouched for. It is said that during the exposition of New Orleans in 1884, some beautiful lilies were exhibited which, because of their rarity, were sold for 15 cents apiece. A woman residing in one of the bayou districts was so entranced with them that she took some home with her from the exposition and planted them in a pond near her house. They multiplied so rapidly that she finally uprooted and scattered them in the Calcasieu River. They stand as a memorial to her even unto this day.

Some Famous Bulls.

The House of Commons, as might have been expected, has contributed a fair share to a very amusing collection of "bulls." It was in one of the debates of that body that the late Col. Saunderson described Eastern Rumelia as "man enough to take her stand" in defense of a certain threatened right.

An Irish M. P. once declared that of the outrages reported from Ireland three-quarters were exaggerated and half had no foundation in fact—a statistical computation that reminds one of another Irish M. P. who declared excitedly to a group of fellow members: "I want to convince you that there isn't any truth in half the lies they are telling about Ireland."

The biography of Dean Hook recalls a certain minor canon who used to preach at the Cathedral when Hook was a boy at Winchester School. In one of his sermons there occurred the striking reflection that "what is impossible can never be, and very seldom comes to pass."

Another discourse was long remembered for its pathetic lamentation on the degeneracy of the age: "O tempora! O mores! What times we live in! Little boys and girls run about the streets cursing and swearing before they can either walk or talk!" But the Church of England has no monopoly of these violent contrasts, for it was at a City Temple meeting not many years ago that a speaker exclaimed: "I find my time is already gone. Therefore, I will keep within it."—[Windsor Magazine.

Remarkable Bird's Nest.

The following details concerning the structure and contents of a stork's nest investigated on the summit of the Cathedral of Colmar in Upper Alsace may be of interest:

The city architect has just delivered a public lecture there on "Storks and Their Ways." He described a stork's nest which was about thirty years old; it measured 6 feet across and was 5 feet in height; it weighed sixteen hundredweight, or over three-quarters of a ton, and it was such a solid mass that it had to be broken up by using a pickax. The nest was made of twigs of wood and clay, and the materials filled twenty-four sacks.

The walls of the nest were found to contain seventeen ladies' black stockings, five fur caps, the sleeve of a white silk blouse, three old shoes, a large piece of leather and four buttons that had belonged to a railway porter's uniform.—[Berlin correspondence London Globe.

Pearl Culture in Japan.

NEW CROP OF ARTIFICIAL ONES APPEARS ON THE MARKET.

THEY ARE NATURAL PEARLS, BUT ARTIFICIALLY PRODUCED—A JAPANESE ENTERPRISE, IN WHICH RED-HEADED WOMEN PLAY AN IMPORTANT PART. CALLED "CULTURE PEARLS," AND AS BEAUTIFUL AS ANY.

By a Special Contributor.

THE market for pearls is seriously threatened by a new Japanese enterprise, which has reduced the production of these "gems of ocean" to a scientific basis. One concern in Japan (it is stated by the United States Fisheries Bureau) is at present turning out $250,000 worth of pearls annually—the business being a monopoly. They are real pearls, it should be understood, produced by introducing tiny pellets of mother-of-pearl (to serve as nuclei) into the shells of pearl oysters.

In luster, shape and size, these pearls—"culture pearls," they are called—are equal to any pearls of natural origin. They are, indeed (says the Fisheries Bureau) most beautiful; and a ready market has already been found for them both in our own country and in Europe.

In the production of the "culture pearls," an important part is played by red-headed women. They are the only women in Japan who have red hair—this characteristic being due to the fact that their tresses have been bleached by a constant exposure to salt water. They are professional divers, and are employed on the pearl-oyster farm, to collect the pearl-bearing bivalves.

The "farm" is located in the province of Shima, which is the Rhode Island of Japan—the smallest of all the Japanese provinces, and celebrated from earliest times for its women divers, who seem to have inherited through many generations a special aptitude for water life. They are veritable human ducks, and for a large part of the year are in the water from five to seven hours daily.

The owner of the "farm" is an enterprising person named Mikimoto. Its headquarters, including a few necessary buildings, are on a small island, called Tadoko, in the Bay of Ago, a few miles south of the famous temple of Ise. This is on the Pacific side of Central Japan. It is a quiet piece of water, excellently adapted for the purpose, with a broken coast line full of deep-running inlets and coves, in which the water is from eighteen to forty feet in depth.

About 1000 acres of water space are leased by Mikimoto, and several millions of pearl oysters are planted in the beds. These are not the large and familiarly-known mollusks, such as supply the pearl fisheries in the Gulf of California, and certain other parts of the world, but small bivalves not more than three inches in diameter, with shells hardly thicker than paper. The species is known to science as Avicula martensii.

Operations for the production of pearls are performed on about 300,000 of the oysters annually. For this purpose they are gathered from the bottom by the women divers, and, being taken to the island, a tiny pellet of mother-of-pearl is inserted between the valves of each shell—whereupon they are put back into the sea. To protect itself against irritation by this intruding object, the mollusk covers it with layer after layer of pearl stuff, thus transforming it after a while into a true pearl.

The pellets of mother-of-pearl are cut from shells of the large species of pearl oyster above mentioned (Meleagrina margaratifera,) which are suitably thick for the purpose, and very fine material—being, in fact, the source of the best mother-of-pearl that comes to market. They are shaped with a file, the operation being so laborious that a skilled workman can hardly turn out more than seventy-five in a day.

It is very important that the pellet shall not fall out, or be pushed out of the oyster after the latter has been replanted in the sea. Accordingly, it is so inserted as to lie near the hinge of the lower, or under, valve, which is the deepest part of the shell. Hitherto it has been found necessary to cut the pellets with one flat side, to prevent them from rolling out—the eventual result being pearls of corresponding shape, incompletely round. But (according to information recently received from Mikimoto by our Fisheries Bureau,) a means, not yet explained, has been devised whereby this difficulty is overcome, and perfectly spherical pearls are produced.

The women divers employed on the "farm" earn ordinarily from 15 to 20 cents a day, but the most expert get 30 cents. Each one has a tub into which she drops the oysters as she brings them to the surface. An average dive occupies a little less than a minute, and results in the gathering of from four to six of the mollusks. One girl will collect from 300 to 500 in a day, at a depth of twenty-five to thirty feet. On coming up and preparing to make another plunge, she takes a deep and quick breath, which produces a prolonged and shrill whistling sound. When fifty or more of the women are in the water at one time, this peculiar whistling is almost incessant.

The water is very cold, owing to an Arctic current which sweeps along the coast, and at least three or four times during the day the women go ashore to warm themselves by fires kindled for the purpose. They are extremely hardy and powerful. Even the responsibilities of maternity interfere with their occupation only for a few hours. But they grow old quickly; their skin becomes rough and coarse, and their hair turns bright red, owing to the continual exposure to salt water. When not in the water, they work in the fields—their husbands and sons, who are in all respects inferior to the women, doing nothing for a living, but passing their days in loafing, smoking, and playing chess.

The "farm" is divided into two parts, one of which might be called the "nursery," while the other portion is devoted to the actual production of pearls. During July and August, the oysters breed. Accordingly, in May and June, large stones, weighing six or eight pounds, are placed at intervals over the bottom, in the shallow inlets and coves, by the women divers. The newly-hatched pearl oysters are free swimmers during the first few days of their existence, and then settle down (like our own edible oysters,) attaching themselves to any suitable object. Thus the stones are soon covered with the "spat."

In this manner immense numbers of the young pearl oysters are collected during the summer, the stones to which they are attached being removed in the autumn to deeper water, as a protection against cold. There they are allowed to grow for three years, at the end of which time, being an inch and three-quarters in length, they are taken out of the water and subjected to the operative treatment already described. Then, being put back into the sea, they are distributed in such a way that there shall be about thirty to every six square feet of bottom.

Every oyster thus returned to the sea contains its pellet of mother-of-pearl, which, with good luck, will eventually become a real pearl. But there are some difficulties to contend against. The mollusks have a good many natural enemies. Octopods and certain kinds of sponges destroy a great many of them. And, once in a while, the "red water" arrives, which is worse than all other troubles put together. It is due to an extraordinary multiplication of certain animalcules, belonging to the order of protozoa, which appear to use up all the oxygen in the water, wiping out animal life of all kinds, including even crabs and eels. A similar phenomenon, attributable to the same cause, occurs now and then in Narragansett Bay with a like result.

This sort of calamity, against which no precaution will serve to guard, is liable to destroy entire beds of the pearl oysters, leaving not a single bivalve alive. Fortunately, however, it is a rare occurrence. Notwithstanding all setbacks, the Mikimoto "farm" is prospering greatly. Dr. Hugh M. Smith of the United States Fisheries Bureau, when he visited the place a year ago, picked out at random ten of the mollusks, fresh out of the water, and found pearls in seven of them. This was understood to be a fair average. Inasmuch as they sell at from $6 to $50 apiece, there is an excellent profit in the business. But, now that means have been discovered whereby they may be made spherical, they will doubtless fetch much higher prices. And it should be remembered that they can be grown almost indefinitely big by allowing the pearl oysters (which ordinarily yield their product four years after the introduction of the pellets) to remain in the beds for a longer period.

A Libel Upon Alaska.

The people of Alaska are indignantly protesting against the device of a seal dormant on a cake of ice which decorates the new stamps issued in connection with the Alaskan-Yukon exhibition at Seattle. It is, they say, a libel on the "glorious climate" of Alaska. To be sure, their winters are a trifle frigid, but spring, summer, and fall beat anything the world affords in the way of perfection. One season does not make a climate, and the indignant Alaskans want to know why a scene representing crops just leaping from the ground, birds singing in leafy trees, and that sort of thing was not chosen instead of a seal frappe.

As a matter of fact, the Alaskans have some reason on their side. Alaska is not a frozen desert, and there are parts of the Territory, some of the Aleutian Islands, for instance, where, even in winter, the weather is mild. The great possibilities of Alaska are as yet not half understood by the general public, and the new postage stamp will not help them to understand. When the natural resources of the Territory are developed all the gold which has ever been gathered there, or will ever be gathered there, will be of insignificant value compared to the resulting wealth.—[New York Press.

Story of a Bell.

Few persons suspect that in the cathedral church of Notre Dame is a bell contemporaneous with Joan of Arc—"the blessed bell" which sounded the tocsin when the maid of Lorraine appeared in August, 1429, and Paris was besieged by the English. This historic bell, referred to by Victor Hugo in his "Notre Dame de Paris," was given to the cathedral in 1400 by Jean de Montaign. It was refounded in 1686, and then rebaptized under the name of Emmanuel Louise Thérèse, in honor of Louis XIV and Marie Thérèse of Austria.

So if this bell is not the same bell which the heroine of Domremy heard, nevertheless the same metal vibrates today at the great religious ceremonies of the metropolitan church. In view of later events it seems rather more than a coincidence that when all the other bells of Notre Dame were destroyed by the revolutionists, Joan's bell should have been spared.—[London Globe.

HOW JUDGE WILLIAMS PERFORMED THE MARRIAGE CEREMONY.

By J. W. Schultz,

Author of "My Life as an Indian."

"TALKIN' of wimmin," said Bowlegs, foreman of my friend Worthington's great cattle ranch, "the queerest one I ever meets is down in Arizony. It's when I'm a heap younger'n I be now. I'm jest a kid an' it's one of them times when I gets a fool notion that I ain't goin' to do any more cow punchin' ever.

"Quittin' the D.H.S. round-up in Wyomin', I drifts down to Yuma, an' there I hears of a new camp away up the river where big placers an' yeller ore veins is scand'lous rich. It's before the railroad days. I buys me a minin' outfit an' lights out on the first up-river steamboat fer Blue Lizard Flat.

"They's a woman on the boat, an' I hears she's bound fer Blue Lizard, too, with a big outfit of minin' supplies, pervisions, beer, an' sech like; she's goin' to start a store there. I ain't payin' much attention to wimmin in them days, but I can't help noticin' her, she's so different. She's medium size, purty good figger, carryin' herself as straight as any shaved-tail lieutenant you ever see come out of West Point. She's dressed martial, too: soldier cap, short skirt, high laced wimmin boots, a reg'lar 44 Colts strapped to her waist. Her black hair is cut short. She has a smooth, white face, a real good mouth an' nose. But her eyes! They're big, cold, hard gray ones which looks you through an' through, sort of contemptious like, an' give the lie to her invitin'-lookin' red lips. What's her hist'ry? Where's she from? Nobody knows, an' nobody asks; them stony-gray eyes prevents that. She's come into the mouth of the Colorado on a deep-water ship sailin' from Gawd knows where, an' then up river on this here stern-wheel craft.

"One evenin' at sundown we ties up at Blue Lizard Flat. Nothin' there but forty or fifty tents, an' mebby twice as many men, a lot of burros browsin' around on sage brush an' tin cans, an' a few fam'lies of Mexicans. The next mornin' early I buys three burros, packs my outfit on 'em, an' with a lot of other gold hunters strikes out fer the desert. As I'm leavin', I sees the woman bossin' the unloadin' of her truck. 'Here you, put that sack there,' she says to one roustabout; an' to another: 'Hurry, my man! lay that box there. Git a move on you.' Gosh! she's business, all right.

"In a month, I 'm back in Blue Lizard, an' the boys gets me there on a burro-drawn stretcher. Me an' a charge of powder has a mix-up, an' I've got a broken arm an' some ribs stove in. We stops in front of a new 'dobe shack what has three or four tents hitched to it, an' a sign what says:

'JANET RIGGS.
'Miners' Supplies.
'Meals $1.50—Lodging $1.50.'

"I'm jest a readin' it, when out she comes. 'What's this?' she says. 'Broken arm—busted ribs? Take him into that there tent an' put him to bed. I'll fix him up as good as new in no time.'

"Wal, sirs, the way she sets an' bandages that arm, an' straight-jackets my ribs, would have been a credit to any sawbones. 'Gosh!' I says, sure admirin' an' thankful. 'Gosh! but that's fine! Where did you learn how?'

"'Shet up!' she snaps. 'None o' yer bizness. I know how, an' that's enough. All you got to do is to keep yer mouth shet an' git well!'

"It's surprisin' the work that woman does in a day. She tends store, keeps any travelers what comes along, cooks the meals, washes the dishes, an' makes the beds. 'Why don't you get a cook?' I asks her. 'Anyhow, one of these here cholo wimmen to do the washin' an' cleanin' up?'

"'I would if I could get any one I could trust,' she says, 'but they ain't to be had in these parts. Well, I'm young an' strong, an' can do it all, an' besides, I saves my money, an' THAT'S what counts. I want a heap of it; I'm sure goin' to live top-notch in my old age.'

"No, she ain't old; about 30, I guess, an' a sure good looker, 'cept fer them awful cold eyes. But mebby I'm the only one who notices that drawback. Anyhow, every last man in the hills, an' every one in Blue Lizard, is courtin' her, every one of 'em 'cept Judge Williams—Henry W. Williams—who is pos'master an' recorder an' jestice of the peace. He don't no ways fool around her. He's a little, blue-eyed, golden-ha'red man, awful quiet an' perlite an' soft-mannered. He batches it an' stays to home a-mindin' his own bizness.

"In three or four days, I'm up an' around, a-settin' in the adobe store most o' the time gassin' with them who comes an' goes. In comes a feller named Pete Goodyear one mornin' an' buys a cigar. 'Pete,' sez Janet, a-glancin' at her book, 'you owes me $30; pay it!'

"I can't. I hain't been paid yet,' says Pete. He's workin' night shift in the Glory Mine. Only an hour before, a feller comes in an' tells us he's been fired an' is buildin' a skiff to go down to Yuma in.

"Janet don't say anything. She walks out from behind the counter casual like, an' then quick as lightnin' pulls the 44 out from under her apron an' sticks it up agin' his ribs. 'Pay up, you dog!' she hisses, an' they's a awful glare in her eyes.

"'Yes, yes, I'll pay. Fer Gawd's sake don't shoot!' Pete whines, an' with tremblin' fingers he dives into his pocket an' fishes out a check. It's fer $65. Janet takes it an' slaps $35 change on the counter. 'There's the difference,' she says, 'an' now you git! Don't you never show yer face in here ag'in!'

"You can bet yer life that after this is told around, whenever any of the boys owed Janet they take pains to square up the very day an' hour agreed on.

"A invalid, an' confined to the house, as you may say, I can't help hearin' many a interestin' conversation between Janet an' them a-courtin' her, 'specially as the house is tents, an' you can hear a whisper, even, from one end of 'em to 'tother. But they ain't no whisperin' done. If they knows I'm around, an' some of 'em sure does, it don't make no differ'nce—till afterwards—an' then they comes an' begs me not to tell. They's a heap of ways of poppin' the question, let me tell you. I guess I know about a hundred by heart, an' I sure fergets a heap more. Some of them fellers begins it comic, an' some tragic, but they all winds up mournful, fer Janet sure never gives 'em any hope whatever. 'What can you do fer me?' she asks. 'Can you buy me a brownstone house on Fifth avenue, New York, an' fill it with nice furniter—an' a lot of servants—an' get me a carriage an' hosses—an' a coachman an' footman?'

"Most allus the feller says he can't, jest at present, but he'll work hard—he'll find a rich mine an' soon take out enough gold fer all these things.

"Janet calls him down, gen'rally, right here. 'Say,' sez she, 'do you love Mendlesun—'n' Haydin—'n' Shooburt—'n' Handle—do you 'preciate the beauty of the Messiar?'

"'What's all them?' the feller asks. 'I never heerd o' such things.'

"'That settles it!' she tells him. 'The man I marries has got to love the ole masters. Good night. Don't go away with any hard feelin's. Yer a good feller, I likes you as a friend; le's stay friends.'

"One day I asks her about this. 'What's the ole masters—an' the Messiar, anyway?' I sez, an' she tells me. Years after, I'm in Chicago with a load of beef cattle, an' the Messiar is on at the Auditorium; 500 voices. I loosens up five plunks fer a seat. Gawd! of all the catterwaulin' you ever heard. I stands it about ten minutes, an' pulls my freight.

"They's one man goes at it different: Harry Carr, an ole broncho buster from Texas, quick-tempered, an' a gun man. He's struck it rich in a dry placer an' got sacks full of gold dust. 'No,' he sez to her, when she rings in the ole masters an' the Messiar, 'no, I don't know nothin' about them things, but I do know you're jest my style of a woman, an' you've jest got to marry me. Right here I takes a kiss to bind the barg'in.'

"Does he git it? Not on yer life. He ain't more'n out of his chair when she pulls her gun, bang! an' pinks him in the shoulder. She's goin' to shoot ag'in, too, but he squawks. 'That's enuff!' he hollers, 'that's enuff!' An' out he goes without his hat, which is a $25 Stetson an' the pride of his heart. You can gamble he's some flustered when he fergets that!

"Course I'm hearin' all this, an' when the gun goes off, I rushes out of my tent into hern, Carr a-passin' me on the run as I reaches the doorway. She's settin' by the table lookin' mighty solemn, an' I suspects I sees a tear or two a-glistenin' in her eyes. The candle don't give much light, though, an' I ain't sure. I don't know what to say, so I sets down an' don't say anythin'.

"'This is awful,' she sez, after a while, 'jest awful. These men are pesterin' the life out of me. I've got to do somethin' to get rid of 'em, or they'll drive me crazy.'

"Still I don't say anythin'. My thinker don't seem to be workin'. I pulls out the makin's an' rolls me a cigarette. Glancin' her way, I sees she's got her eyes on me, sort o' sizin' me up; an' purty soon she asks, real soft-like: 'How old be you, Charles?'

"Say, fellers, talk about bein' scart! I expect I turns plumb white. An' weak! I couldn't hold my cigarette, an' it fell to the floor. But you bet yer life I found somethin' to say then, an' quick, too. 'I'm only 20 year old,' I tells her, 'a year under age, but all the same they's a little gal up there in Wyomin' who's promised to hook up with me, 's soon as I'm my own boss.'

"At that she sets back an' laughs an' laughs till she's red in the face, an' I joins in. I can't help laughin' at the whopper I've told. 'Oh, you silly boy!' she sez. 'You ree'ly thought I was goin' to propose, didn't you?'

"'No, mam, I didn't,' I answers, lyin' prompt an' easy. 'I didn't think any sech thing. I got more sense'n to believe you want to marry such a no-account kid as me.'

"Then we both laugh ag'in. But presently she gets mighty solemn, an' sets still, thinkin' hard. I rolls another cigarette, an' lights it this time.

"'Charles, I want to ask you somethin',' she sez, after a while. 'If a woman loves a man, but don't know if he loves her or not, an' anyway don't see no signs of his ever proposin', him bein' an awful timid man anyhow, in that case, Charles, don't you think the woman has got a right to propose to him?'

"'Wal,' course she's got a right to, all right,' I tells her; 'but all the same, ef she ain't sure the man does care fer her, I think she better keep still. 'Cause why? Plain enuff. No real gent will say no to a woman; he's bound to oblige her; an' in this case, ef he don't care fer her, he'll do what she asks—an' ever after live in hell.'

"'Mebby so. Mebby so,' she sez. 'Still if she's jest as good an' kind to him as she can be, don't you think that he's bound to care fer her after awhile, jest as much as she does fer him?'

"'You've sure got me a-guessin',' I answers. 'I ain't never had any 'xperience in love matters, so I ain't got anythin' to go on.'

"'Why, how's that?' she asks, smilin' ag'in. 'I thought you was engaged to a Wyomin' girl.'

"'So I be, so I be,' I hastens to say; 'but then, 'twas all done so quick—jest a matter of two evenin's courtin'—that I don't know to this day how it all happened.'

"She lets it go at that. Anyway up at the other end of town Judge Williams is at it ag'in with his fiddle, playin' the catterwaulin'ist tunes a man ever heard. 'Come on,' sez she, 'let's go up where we can hear it plainer.'

"'Tain't the first time she's asked me to go there with her of a evenin'; she don't take no chances of bein' waylaid by any cholo or other riff raff of this here camp. Janet Riggs is a most extry-ord'nary woman. She mixes with the men sure free, she takes a glass of beer on occasion, but, by gosh! she's straight. Nobody doubts that, an' after one look at them eyes of hers nobody thinks of usin' her any way but plumb respectful.

"The little jedge has a little 'dobe house, an' a remada out in front of it with flowerin' vines crawlin' up the posts, an' some chairs in it he's made hisself out of willows an' deer hide. They's a home-made desk thar, too, an' a ole Wells-Fargo safe to keep papers in. In the daytime, the remada's his office, an' other times his settin'-room, ef you can call a place a room that ain't got no walls to it.

"'Good-evenin', Jedge,' says Janet, as we approaches. 'We hears you playin', an' can't resist the tem'tation to come up whar we can hear more plainer.'

"'Good-evenin', mam. Good-evenin', Bowlegs,' says the jedge, layin' down his fiddle an' flyin' around in the moonlight gittin' a chair fer Janet, then changin' his mind an' gittin' another one, puttin' that back an' drawin' out still another one, an' sayin': 'I declare, I should have remembered that this here one is most suitable fer a lady.' He's sure flustered whenever him an' her meets up. But she ain't, you bet. She allus starts in talkin' about the music—'Sim Funny I miner, Shooman,' an' 'Knockturn Opus Thirty-five,' an' sech like, which is all Greek to me, but he savez it, an' talks the same kind of stuff back to her, timid like. Then purty soon she gits him to playin', an' keeps him at it fer an hour or so. It's torture to me, fer of all the dog-gone tunes you ever heard them's the limit. But I has to stand it, till one evenin' a bright idee strikes me. I ain't feelin' well,' I sez, 'an' I'll have to go. I guess the jedge'll see you safe back.'

"'Course he will,' sez she. 'Here's the key to the store; help yerself to a bottle of beer; mebby it'll do you good.'

"After that it's dead easy: on some excuse or other I allus pulls my freight, an' he has to bring her back. An' then she makes him come in, an' we has a bottle of beer, an' mebby a can of oysters or lobsters.

"Things runs along this way fer about a month. Puttin' two an' two together, what she asked me that time, an' what she does, I sees plain enuff that Janet's plumb gone on the jedge, an' I studies over it a lot. A gun man—I mean a woman—herself, strong, quick, restless, an' a hell of a good rustler, it don't seem nateral that she should take up with this quiet, bashful, easy-goin' little blue-eyed jedge, instead of one of the big, proud-lookin', hard-rustlin' rakers-in of the dough that's courtin' her. I wonders what the end'll be. It's my eye opener to what my 'xperience of wimmen has since proved, that they're the uncertain'st things to gamble on in the world.

"Up to a certain mornin' the jedge ain't wise to what we all sees, an' then he almost has a fit. I'm settin' there in his remada smokin' a cig., when along comes Sid Norman, an' settin' down, rolls one, too. 'Wal Jedge, when's it to be?' he asks, after he's lit up an' drawn in a lungful o' smoke, an' let it curl out through his nose.

"'When's what to be?' says the little man, busy with his papers, an' sort of absent-like.

"'Why, the marriage, of course. When're you an' Janet goin' to have the knot tied?'

"The jedge looks up at him, sure astonished. 'Janet Riggs an' me is friends,' sez he, short and prim, 'but nothin' more. They's no thought of mat'ermony on either part.'

"It's Norman's turn, now, to look 'stonished. 'By gum!' he sez, a-scratchin' his head. 'By gum!' an' sets there starin', open-mouthed.

"'What's the matter with you, settin' there an' lookin' that way at me?' asks the jedge, gettin' uneasy.

"'Nothin', oh, nothin',' Norman tells him, gettin' up an' startin' away.

"'But you must tell me,' the little man cries, runnin' after him, grabbin' his arm an' lookin' up in his face. 'Come! we've allus been friends; tell me what all this means.'

"'Why, if you must know, it's this way,' he answers, hesitatin' a whole lot. 'This mornin', I asks Janet ef she'll hook up with me, an' she sez, sez she: "Sidney, you're too late—too late by about six weeks; my heart is already given to another man."'

"'I wishes her joy. 'Course I don't ask her who the man is—I don't think they's any need to, seein' that you're the only one she ree'ly has anythin' to do with, a-comin' here every evenin' to hear you play, an' you takin' her home.'

"'But 'tain't me, 'tain't me!' the little man cries. 'I leaves it to Bowlegs, here; he knows 'tain't me.'

"'Jedge,' sez I, 'from words she's let drop, an' puttin' two an' two together, you're the man, an' no mistake about it.'

"'My Gawd! my Gawd!' he gasps, sinkin' down into a chair. An' there we leaves him, starin' away off at the desert, an' yet not seein' it.

"You bet yer life they ain't any fiddlin' that night, nor the next, nor the next, nor any little jedge in sight of an evenin', either. He sets in his remada mornin's an' afternoons, tendin' to bizness—an' then he jest naterally fades away, nobody knows where, till the next day. Janet don't know what to make of it. She fidgets around, can't keep still a minnit. When they ain't nothin' else to do, takin' things down off'n the store shelves, an' then puttin' 'em back as they was before. Once, when she complains that she ain't got nothin' to do, I sez to her: 'Why don't you git one of them big needles an' some rainbow yarns, an' croshay a tidy, or whatever?'

"'Croshay! Oh, my Gawd! me croshay!' she cries. 'That's what my four faded, useless, prim old maid sisters do, day after day in their prim little drawin'-room, and starve on the pittance left them by their mother. If you had said the knife, now! Go and break your arm again; or shoot up a cholo, so I can operate on him. I might ferget myself in such work.'

"That's kind of interestin', an' I wants to know her

"Wal, after mebby a week, she says to me: 'Charles, I'm goin' huntin' tonight, an' I wants you to come with me.'

"'All right,' I sez; 'shall I take my Winchester an' my six-shooter?'

"She tells me we won't need no gun at all. I knows it, too, saveying real well what kind of game we're goin' after.

"About 9 o'clock we goes a roundabout way up to the jedge's, an' sets down in the remada. They ain't no moon now, an' the night is awful dark. 'Don't you dare light a cigarette!' she tells me, 'nor make any noise whatever.' I sure keeps still.

"After an hour or so, we hears some one comin' in from the desert, nearer'n nearer, until he's crunchin' the gravel in the remada, an' we can make out, dim like, who 'tis.

"'Jedge, is that you?' asked Janet, an' I hardly knows her voice, it's so changed—so soft an' sweet-like.

"'Yes, it's me,' says he. 'Is anythin' wrong? What can I do fer you?'

"'You can light the lamp in the 'dobe,' she says. 'I want to talk with you—I want to ask you somethin'.'

"He fumbles around, unlocks the door, goes in an' strikes a match, she followin'. The lamp is lit, an' they stand there by the table face to face. 'Jedge—Henry, I mean,' sez she, 'I've come up here tonight to ask you to marry me. Will you?'

"'My Gawd!' he says, startin' back an' starin' at her. 'Woman, who are you?—what are you—what does this mean?'

"'Who am I?' she sez. 'I'm the one capable person of a big, 'ristocratic, broken-down old Puritan fambly. What am I? I'm an honest, clean-minded woman. What does this mean? It means, Henry Williams, that I've done something I swore I never would do—I've fell in love. I falls in love with you at first sight. I don't know why—but I does.'

"'But we couldn't git married nohow,' sez he, fishin' around fer some excuse. 'They ain't no gospel shark here—it's low water, an' the boats ain't runnin', an' even if they was, as a jedge, an' the recorder of this camp, I can't leave it, even fer a day——'

"'Oh, I've thought of all that,' Janet puts in, 'an' I've figgered out a way: They's nothin' to pervent Henry Williams, the jedge, from marryin' me to Henry Williams, the citizen.'

"He starts back an' looks at her, an' as he looks, I can see a change growin' in him: he sort of swells out; red comes into his cheeks, an' fire into his pale-blue eyes.

"'I'll do it!' he cries, all of a sudden, springin' forward an' graspin' her hand. 'An' right now, too, soon as we kin get a witness. An' not only that, Janet Riggs, but I'll be glad an' proud to do it. You're a woman, you are, jest the kind we need in this great 'n' glorious West.'

"Janet calls me then, an' I goes in. The jedge grabs me with both hands an' says he's glad I'm there. An' then—jest as if he'd done it all his life—he begins: 'Henry Watts Williams, do you take this woman to be yer lawful wedded wife—to love an' cherish an' honer ferever?'

"An ans'erin' hisself—he says: 'I does.'

"An' so it goes, till at last he says: 'I tharfore persounces yer man an' wife; you may kiss the bride.' An' with that, he up an' gives her a big smack an' a hug, an' she does the same to him. I gets a kiss, too. Then I signs a paper the jedge makes out, an' sneaks away."

"And afterwards?" I asked, when Bowlegs had lit his cigarette.

"They're livin' in 'Frisco. I stopped with 'em a few days las' summer. Talk about happy! They're it."

Flowers Kept by Freezing.

Freezing flowers to keep them fresh is a modern idea. They are picked in the bud and preserved by refrigeration while being transported. They can travel safely in this way for several weeks. When unpacked they are found free of damage and when placed in water and left alone they slowly awaken and come into full bloom.

It appears that experiments are being made in South Africa with a view to despatching them in this way in bulk at the seasons when they are scarce elsewhere. The flowers undergo no deterioration from their treatment either in the beauty of their color or in their longevity after immersion in water. Curiously enough growth suspended by refrigeration appears to resume so slowly that the blossoms thrive in a room for a considerably longer period than if placed there immediately after being cut in the garden.

The process would also serve to introduce to our notice many beautiful members of the horticultural family with which at present we are unfamiliar, such plants as the gorgeous iris, which grows wild in luxurious profusion in South Africa, or those which abound on the slopes of the Andes in South America.—[Chicago Tribune.

London to Japan in Sixteen Days.

The "shrinkage of the globe" goes on apace. It is pointed out by "Travel and Exploration" that, owing to the Trans-Siberian Railway, as newly supplemented by the enterprise of the Great Eastern Railway Company and the International Sleeping Car Company, it is actually possible to reach Japan in sixteen days from London. The new service is via Harwich and the Hook of Holland, the passenger traveling to Moscow via Berlin and Warsaw. At the ancient capital of Russia the Trans-Siberian Railway is joined, the trains conveying first and second-class passengers. Up to Moscow the service is daily, beyond bi-weekly, the trains leaving Moscow on Sundays and Wednesdays at 11:30 p.m. Vladivostok is reached on the eleventh day after leaving Moscow, and Japan (Tsourouga) is reached two days later.—[Berlin Correspondence Westminster Gazette.

Ghosts of the Firelight.

SOME QUIET MUSINGS OF A LONELY PHILOSOPHER.

By a Special Contributor.

OTHER persons have built glowing wood fires and have sat by them and mused, and afterward have written down their musings. There is nothing new under the stars, and wood fires and reveries are among the oldest of human recollections. Yet nightly, year in and year out, many a lone man such as I starts the red blaze leaping in his fireplace, draws close his most comfortable chair, and with museful pipe and cheering decanter dreams somewhat for an hour or two while he mesmerically watches the jumping lights and stretches booted legs fireward, basking in the warmth of his hermitage hearth.

Tonight, so sitting in a mountain wilderness, ghosts are about me, and my long log room is filled with specters. The firelight flickers and dances on rough walls, over rude chairs and benches, and when it dies down to dusk, the forms of many persons die down with it, flickering as the fire flickers, and vapory faces spring into half-being as the firelight springs into renewed life.

The land where I live is ancient; and, were it not for my own lodge on the hillslope above a mountain lake—an infinitesimal change for a few days on the face of changeless Nature—the land would be today as it was fifty, a hundred, a thousand—God knows how many thousands—years ago. The serried armies of spruces have sprung up like the men of the dragon's teeth, and Cadmus-Nature, with age, and tempest, and fire, has beaten them down again, how many hundreds of times! Men have come and gone. Vanished races and peoples, and aboriginal tribes of far generations, men of many colors, but of one primeval heart; and today the new pines and a white face, to be succeeded through long tomorrows by what forests and what unknown faces! Where the dark peoples of old, the prehistoric, the Aztec, the vanished Indian, have pitched their camps and tepees, my log cabin stands for a day; and as they have left no trace of being, so it, too, shall be eaten by nature, and the changeless hill shall yet brood above its lake. But I am, and men have been before me; and in my fire-lighted lodge, musing with my pipe and decanter, I fancy the ghosts of aforetime, and hold communion with the men who, even as I, have journeyed from distant places to worship the Goddess of the Lake.

Far back in the beginning, when the waters first filled the volcanic basin, and the spruces grew about the deep shores, what men came to see and to marvel? We new conquerors of the land like to fancy it a wilderness before we entered upon it. We like to dream that it has rested here quietly, awaiting our coming, that all its splendors and its beauties have been held in trust for us, and are now for the first time unveiled to man's eyes and heart. Eyes of the forest folk for long ages, we dream, alone have surveyed the still waters. And indeed, the prowlers and the browsers have always been about its shores, though, alas! their days are numbered. Extinct and fearful beasts, too, in the dim chaotic times, have drunk of the waters of the lake and have passed. Domestic sheep and cattle, and as yet unbred animals, shall in their turn drink and pass. Here the puma has slipped down through coverts, to lay on its belly and lap the chill waters, and the startled deer has plunged loudly and swam from shore to shore. The elk and the big horn—but even now they are vanished—the bison—legendary beast!—and the packed wolves, lean and panting from the chase, have drunk here. And now and again, man.

Hairy, ape-like, yonder in the dim corner of my room, naked, unlovely to see, but man! By some cave of the hills, or some rude shelter of green boughs, he has stood, looking down over the lake, and yearning somewhat, and at a loss to understand the sense of gravity and melancholy that possessed him.

The vanished cliff dweller, sire of the mysterious Pueblo, has here come to trap furs, or, in small parties, has spied upon ghosts of whom we know nothing. Yonder he stands, low of stature, slender, not of a martial face or frame, but peace loving and war fearing, invention on his forehead, and with honest, calloused hands. When he saw the waters he knew them beautiful. The mound builder, ascendant of the eastern aborigines, has here come in war parties, hunting the bear, and dancing in the magic nights the long, weird, firelighted and frenzied dances that have come down to today. Grim he seems to me, where his ghost stands in the throng. Taller than the Indian, high-cheeked and dark, with not wholly sane eyes, and ruthless pride smoking in their depths; brawny and purposeful, decorated and tattooed most savagely, hairless, tufted, but withal clear-featured. Beside him, the crooked and dwarfed slave, darker than his master, with mattock on shoulder—even the poor helot who toiled on far plains and erected fortresses and fantastic mound temples and bulwarked villages. Next the Aztec, golden-casqued, armored, resplendent; he alone in the old days came because he was told of the lake, and his imagination pictured it to his soul, until he could not rest for yearning to see with his waking eyes the beauties he fancied might be hidden here. Where his ghost stands in my cabin, I think I discern on his impassive face the thrill of satisfied desire. He is my brother; he came to the land to see and to marvel; and seeing it, he alone of the white man's predecessors loved and understood it. It was a country after his own soul, wild, and savage, and very, very beautiful, and withal melancholy; as melancholy as all beauty must ever be.

Indians of many tribes, babel-tongued, indeed, have come and gone upon the waters, and their ghosts crowd about me. Red hunters and trappers, alone in the snows, their thin tepee smokes lost among the pines, have traversed the frozen lake; and on its summer shores squaws have pounded their meal and cooked their meats, papooses have startled the echoes with their laughter, grave, robed braves have lounged, while silent canoes have darted out from rocks and coves into the ripples and mirrored skies. Legends there are, vague and hardly to be heard of, that mountain Utes have handed down through the generations touching the lives of many savages on this bulwarked lake. But the tepees are gone, the canoes are rotted, the trails are overgrown, the graves are vanished. Nature, the giver, has taken lives and works into herself; for if she gives she receives back with usury; the works become hers, and her land is changeless. Only legends remain, to be passed from father to son until the stories are lost and but vague mythologies frighten the superstitious.

Here, surely, came some adventurous and high-hearted Spaniard, seeking gold for himself, land for his king, souls for his God; the first Caucasian to stand upon a cold summit and gaze for long hours into the Theater of the Lake. To my cabin his ghost, too, has come, with his gay garments in tatters, his once curled hair ragged and tangled, his beard untrimmed, but his eye unclouded, his breastplate polished, his sword and pike sharp and burnished and true. He found the land, the gold and the souls, but he took none of them home. Rather, he had come home, and here, under some dark canopy of trees, the armor and arms have rusted to pebbles, the bones have fertilized the soil, and his body is some giant spruce, singing his old litanies in the wind.

Now, in my reverie, the white faces come thick and fast, mingling with the dark brows and high cheeks until the spirits of the aboriginal races are crowded into the night. Sharp-featured and eager, the cassocked Jesuit and his armed, swart followers; the furred voyageur, and, with rough skin, heavy flaxen beard, coon-skin cap, long musket, at last the Saxon trapper!

The first man of my race to venture into the wilderness, to breast the hills and descend, silent and wary and alert, into the forest. There is no trace of his dwelling, but, solid and substantial, with log walls and stone hearth, it once stood near the shore of the lake, even as my cabin now stands. His moccasined feet once slipped silently where my boots follow, his canoe rippled the twilighted lake as his fish line whistled in the air, and his flintlock woke the echoes that now shout to my repeater. Beaver and furs of many kinds he trapped through the Arctic winter, and in the cloudy spring, with gigantic pack on back, treading as warily as he came, he went over the sky line and disappeared. And after him, year by year, came other men of his kind, until the beaver vanished. Rough and rude their lives, savage their short hours of mirth, long and silent their busy days, and tragic their sudden wrath. Some of them—nameless and forgotten, but whose progeny visibly inhabit civilized lands—here found shallow beds and unending sleep, or are blown past me on the winds when the dry dust sweeps lakeward. Others, perhaps, rest, their business done with, their traps and furs forgotten, down under the blue waters that look so gentle in the sun. But, however buried, they are dead and gone, and not a memory remains of them. Like the prehistoric and the primitive peoples, the explorers and the warriors, they, too, have seen the Goddess of the Lake and have marveled or worshipped, and so have passed into nature. I, alone of all the souls that have preceded me, tonight listen to the soughing pines, the gurgling voices of the water people, and am palpably here and alive and housed with contentment.

A few years, and this cabin where I dream will be gone without a trace or a memory. A few years more, another will stand on its site; another cabin, but a far better one. Where now only pines and boulders group about the lake shore, I fancy future cottages standing, close-packed, glowing with lights and comfort. On the starred lake, boats and canoes cross and mingle, white-winged yachts nod to the moon, eager, churning launches dart here and there, and from some long pier, where I see white-gowned dancers flitting like ghosts, flashes an electrical illumination, and a musical waltz floats out over the waters.

And after the dancers, silence again, the undisturbed calls of forest folk, the murmur of trees, and a night bird crying over vanishing ruins!

Nature unchangeable, ever the same, gives life, and takes life and the works of life. Unknown peoples have come and gone on the lakeside; unknown peoples will come and go. For a day it is my lake; tomorrow I too will be numbered among the numberless whose ghosts surround me. Settlers will immigrate, and live long lives from generation to generation; pleasure seekers will make of my lake a miracle of beauty and a Mecca of frivolity, the trees will vanish, and houses and farms and cottages and pavilions will cover the land. The men and the women will think it has always been so, and always must remain so. Of the people who preceded them no trace will be found. Then, again, the voices will cease—why, I know not, but it is nature's immutable law—the trees or the desert will come, and of the gay dancers, too, there shall be no memory.

But of all that there is little to be said. In my chair by the fire, my legs spread comfortably, a pipe in my hand and a decanter at my elbow, what matter for the vanished peoples or the peoples to come? The lake is mine, the hills are mine, the night is mine; best of all, the cabin is mine and its comfort, life is mine, and youth and solitude to enjoy it; fire and the visions of the fire are mine. And, though it should vanish tomorrow, tonight the universe is mine, for I am alone in it, dreamful and content. The growing wind presaging storm, the louder shouting of the trees, the murmur and roll of the lake below me, but add to my comfort as I sit in my warm room, nodding, cosy and dull, while the firelight dances over me, and the smoke wreaths curl into the chimney. Nature will indeed take me and my works, but tonight I am greater than nature, for I live, move, have sentient being, and know that the end is not far off.

Good Short Stories.

BRIEF ANECDOTES GATHERED FROM VARIOUS SOURCES.

Compiled for The Times.

A Shame.

COL. HIRAM C. SHELLEY, at a Grand Army banquet in Duluth, praised the shrewdness of the Civil War veteran.

"These old war horses," said Col. Shelley, "are courted, when their wives die, by young women, sometimes of great beauty. The young women pretend to love them; but what they really love is the widow's pension that a veteran, after his last battle, leaves behind.

"The old war horses are not to be fooled. Seldom indeed do you hear of their marrying. I know of but one such marriage, and the hero of that was a fool anyway. I'll call him Scraggs.

"Old Scraggs, the day after his wife's death, married the hired girl, a lass of 17. The indignant neighbors gathered under his window on the wedding night and gave him a serenade with tin horns, wash boilers and the like. Soloists roared through megaphones the general opinion on his marriage.

"At last Scraggs appeared on the balcony. He held up his hand to quiet the uproar. Then he said in a shocked voice:

"'I shud think you'd be ashamed, friends, a-makin' all this racket, and only the day after there's been a funeral in the house!'"

In War Time.

GEN. ADALBERT R. BUFFINGTON, at a dinner in Madison, N. J., told a number of Civil War stories.

"Gen. Mahone," he said, "was very thin. One cold and windy December morning in '64 he was taking a nap in his tent when his old colored servant, 'Uncle Davy,' tiptoed in, and stumbling in the darkness, knocked down the general's folding cot and spilled him out on the frozen ground.

"Gen. Mahone jumped up furiously, seized a scabbard, and made for Davy. Davy ran. The general gave chase.

"Uncle Davy tore up hill and down dale till he was pretty well out of breath; then he looked back over his shoulder at his master, who bounded after him on slender limbs blue with cold, his long white night shirt fluttering in the chill morning.

"'Fo' de lan's sake, Mars' William,' the exhausted Davy yelled desperately, 'yo' hain't trustin' yo'se'f in dis wind on dem legs, is yo'?'"

A Big Job.

IN the height of the wheat tumult last month, Broker Patten, discussing the government's wheat estimates with a reporter, said calmly:

"But some of the men the government takes its figures from are greenhorns. Perfect greenhorns. As bad as the Dutch sailor, you know. The captain said to this sailor, when the ship came to port:

"'Take a boat, run ashore, and buy $2 worth of vegetables.'

"The sailor didn't know what vegetables were, so, as soon as he struck land, he said to a 'longshoreman:

"'What is vegetables, mate?'

"'Oh, dried peas, for instance,' the 'longshoreman answered.

"So the Dutch sailor spent his $2 on a huge sack of dried peas.

"When he drew near the ship again with his load, the captain called to him from the bridge:

"'Well, have you got those vegetables?'

"'Aye, aye, sir,' said the sailor.

"'Then,' said the captain, 'hand them up to cookie one at a time.'

"'Shiver my timbers,' said the sailor, 'I've got a job before me now, and no mistake!'"

The Technical Waiter.

DISCUSSING in Anoka a certain battle of the Civil War, P. G. Woodward, commander of the Minnesota Department of the Grand Army of the Republic, said:

"That general reminded me of a waiter in Minneapolis. The general was too scientific. He was too busy with causes and effects, with technical moves and what not, to get results—that is, to win battles.

"So with my Minneapolis waiter. In a restaurant I said to him:

"'Look at the color of this water. Why, it's not fit to drink!'

"But the waiter, instead of rushing some crystal-pure water to me, took up my goblet, studied it carefully, shook his head, and said:

"'No, sir. You're deceivin' yourself, sir. The water's perfectly all right, sir. It's only the glass what's dirty.'"

All Had Drawn Blanks.

"COOKING," said May Irwin, at a dinner in New York, "is a cure for nervous prostration. This cure is cheaper than a European trip. It commends itself better to husbands, too.

"For my part, I like the kind of woman who prefers the cooking to the travel cure. Deliver me from the kind of woman that is too big for her job.

"Up near Irwin Island, I know one of these objectionable women. Her husband was going fishing the other day. He said bitterly:

"'My fishing trousers haven't a single button on them!'

"'How fortunate!' said his wife. 'Now, if you're drowned, it will be so easy to identify your body, won't it, dear?'

"'No,' the husband roared. 'For all the other chaps in the crowd are married, too!'"

A Rich Error.

"PRINTERS' errors are always funny," said Gen. P. P. Parker, of the Arizona G.A.R., "and I'll never forget one that was made over a Memorial Day sermon some years ago in Phoenix.

"The Monday morning report of this sermon began:

"'The Rev. Dr. John Blank greased the pulpit * *he occasion'—and so on.

"'Graced,' of course, is what was meant."

The Half-Breeds.

"THE COUNTESS DE POURTALES was a New York Lorillard," said a New York tobacconist. "So on both sides, of course, she has blue blood. Yet she is without false pride.

"At a recent tobacco men's convention, a director told me of a remark the countess made in Biarritz to an arrogant Englishman.

"This fellow boasted of his ancestry. The countess said that sort of talk wouldn't be understood in the Wild West. She said an Englishman said to a Texas cowboy once:

"'I have Tudor blood in my veins on the maternal side, and through my father's family I am a Plantagenet.'

"'Is that so?' said the cowboy, brightening with keen interest. 'My blood's a leetle mixed, too. My grandfather was a Jersey tenderfoot, and my grandmother a Digger Indian squaw. We're both half-breeds, stranger. Come and liquor up!'"

Zeke Was Right.

SECRETARY WILSON of the Department of Agriculture, was discussing, apropos of Memorial Day, the work to which the soldier turned at the end of the Civil War.

"Many soldiers," he said, "turned to farming. Some of our best fruit farms were started by old soldiers who, finding their business gone at the war's end, adopted a country life perforce.

"They made ingenious farmers. Here is an example. An Iowa man employed a boy to guard his strawberry patch from birds. The berries—fancy fruit as big as peaches—kept disappearing, and the man suspected the boy of eating them.

"So one morning he came down to the patch, looked it over, and then said:

"'I know you don't touch these berries, my lad, but Zeke says you do. Today I'll test you—just to convince Zeke.'

"He took out a little lump of chalk, and pretended to chalk the boy's lips; but really it was only his finger that he rubbed over them.

"'Now,' he said, 'when I come down here this afternoon, we'll see who's right about you, Zeke or I.

"And with pretended carelessness he tossed the chalk on to the ground.

"On his return, some hours later, it was plain who was right. The boy's lips were chalked with a white, stiff layer half an inch thick."

An Awkward Compliment.

INSPECTOR-GENERAL HORNADAY of the Grand Army of the Republic was relating incidents of famous national encampments.

"I remember a little Jap who attended one of our banquets," he said, smiling, "and a queer compliment that he paid to a colonel's wife.

"I sat between the two, and the lady said across to me:

"'Mr. Takashira, you compress the ladies' feet in your country, don't you?'

"'Oh, no, madam; that is a Chinese custom,' said the Jap. 'We Japanese allow our ladies' feet to grow to their full size. Not that'—and he bowed and hissed in the polite Japanese way—'not that they could ever hope to rival yours, madam.'"

A Pretty Story.

SIR CASPAR PURDON CLARKE, discussing a tax that he believed to be unjust, said at a dinner in New York:

"Men would not pay such a tax unless they had the naiveté of the little girl who visited the famous brothers Grimm—the fairy-tale waiters, you know.

"The little girl knocked at the modest Grimm door, and William Grimm opened it.

"'Are you,' she said, 'the person who wrote these pretty tales?' and she showed him under her arm a copy of his immortal book.

"'Yes,' he answered, smiling. 'I and my brother. We wrote them together.'

"'And you wrote this story about the clever little tailor who married the princess?'

"'Yes. Oh, yes,' said William Grimm.

"'Well,' said the little girl, 'it says at the end of the story that whoever doesn't believe it must pay you a mark. Now I don't believe that a princess ever, ever married a tailor. I haven't as much as a mark, but here is a penny, and I will pay you the rest as soon as I can.'"

Knew Who Made the World.

ONCE upon a time, not so long ago, a couple of cow punchers found themselves guests in the home of a minister of the gospel whose custom was to hold family worship of a morning, and to conclude the same by asking each one present to give some quotation from the scriptures. One after another repeated some text, until at last it came the turn of Jim Bulstoke of the Crowfoot ranch.

"My dear young friend," said the dominie, as he saw the latter hesitating, "surely you can recall some verse from the Bible?"

Jim's face was bathed with profuse perspiration, but at last there came to him some approximation of a memory of something he had read or heard at some stage of his life about the first chapter of Genesis. At last he broke out: "God made the world!"

The dominie lifted a hand to hide a sudden smile, but bowed to Jim's neighbor in the circle. Curley was even worse off than Jim had been, and for the life of him could not think of anything. At last, remembering the occasional virtue of a good bluff, he twisted one foot around his chair leg and, with all the confidence he could muster, remarked: "He shore did!"—[Recreation.

A Child's Essay.

THE following essay was written by a fifth-grade pupil in one of the schools of Los Angeles recently. The teacher had read a description of an iceberg to the class, and it was their duty to reproduce it in their own words.

"THE ICE BIRD."

"An ice bird is a very large animal. It makes more noise than thunder sometimes. They have to be pushed along. It takes them a day to go 47 feet. Some of the ice birds are 40 miles long and 37 miles wide. Sometimes the heat causes it to burst."

The Bear and the Prospector.

THE best bear story I ever heard, states a writer in May Recreation, was told me by an amateur prospector, who might have stepped out of a comic weekly. He had made a big trip in the Siskiyous, the greatest country for bears in America today, with no weapon save a nickel-plated miner's pick.

"Have you seen much game?" I asked.

"None at all," he replied, in his dry falsetto.

"No bear!" I exclaimed, knowing he had come right through Bear Camp.

"Oh, yes," he returned. "Quite so. Now that you mention it, I daresay that is what it was. Didn't occur to me, you know. I was so very angry, don't you see, I took no pains to identify the brute."

"Why, what did he do to you?"

"What did he do? Why, nothing, of course. You see, the little beggar ran and climbed up a stump. And he wouldn't come down so I could obtain a decent photograph of him. Sat up there half a day, fifty feet from the ground. Then his legs got tired holding on, I imagine, for he started in to squeal. And, do you know, the brute must have given me away; for pretty soon his mother, I suppose it was, came hurrying up and I had to clear out. Four times as big as he, she was, I assure you.

"Did you run?" I asked, laughing.

"Oh, not at all! Not at all," said he. "But still I thought it best not to remain." He paused and stroked his stubbly chin reflectively.

"By Jove!" said he, finally. "How very interesting. I should have thought to photograph the old one—she looked quite savage, don't you know."

"Such a picture would have been unique, to say the least," I replied.

"Quite so," said he.

The Age of Lessness.

THE following discussion was overheard by a well-known man-about-town, in one of the hotel lobbies, the other evening:

"You don't think that we are progressing by elimination? Well, you haven't looked about enough yet! Elimination is just the word! Now, look here—look at a few of the things we have in daily use from which certain things have been eliminated. We have horseless carriages, that is automobiles; at home we cook with a fireless stove, run by electricity; steamless engines, many of the railroads are putting on electric locos; wireless telegraph; there are motherless babies, raised in incubators; Uncle Sam is trying out a noiseless gun which uses smokeless powder; there are painless dentists and bloodless surgeons; by passing pure-food laws, the government assures us harmless foods; stenographerless stenography, where you dictate into a phonograph; then there are spineless cactus and seedless oranges; there are actorless plays, where the moving picture does the work; then there is the new invention the wireless telephone——"

"The what? The wireless telephone! Oh, I say! I have had to swallow wireless telegraph, but wireless telephone is too much!"

"That's what I thought at first, but you can see it work any day you've a mind to, in one of the big stores right here in this city. It is a sure enough telephone, and it works without any wires whatever. You just take up the standard and cut loose, and there you are, able to talk with any one who has the other end of the machine. In the East they have talked over 100 miles, and it is easier than the regulation long distance, as there's no central to call up——"

"Well, that's a corker! But I have seen some eliminated things myself. This morning I went into a waiterless restaurant for breakfast, and the first thing I ate was a foodless food called 'Nutless Nuts,' which I washed down with coffeeless coffee; then I walked down Broadway and saw several hairless dogs following hipless ladies who wore wrinkleless faces which had evidently been smothed with harmless face cream; in the paper this morning I see that there are still brainless sons of rich parents; I also see——"

"Never mind, you're getting dippy. Let's move!"

And they did. V. E. S.

THE DELPHINIUMS.

SOME POINTS ABOUT THEIR MODES OF CULTIVATION.

By Ernest Braunton.

SOUTHERN CALIFORNIA seems to be the natural home of the delphinium, for we have several very fine native species, and all exotic kinds grow here with most unusual luxuriance. We have one native species that is a bright cardinal in color—the grandest of all wild species in the world. While the native larkspurs are showy, none of them will at all compare with the hybrids obtained by the enterprising plant breeder. Especially fine are the hybrids of Delphinium belladonna. We have a strain of this species in the local market that comes in three shades of blue that are among our showiest garden perennials. Many think these plants difficult to grow, though they are among the most simple in culture. There are a few points, of course, that one must observe if the best results are to be obtained.

It is no use trying to grow delphiniums in poor shallow soil; better not grow any than thus abuse them. The soil must be deep (three or four feet) rich and well drained. Manure heavily with rich stable manure, commercial fertilizer, bone dust or any other material capable of making the best and most available food for the plants. The strong-growing species and varieties require lots of room—4 by 3 feet will be none too much for each plant after the first year. When they grow six feet high, they need room in proportion. Mulch the spaces between the plants with manure, leaves, grass clippings, or anything to prevent the burning of the surface roots, whether in bed by themselves or in borders mixed with other plants. The less robust kinds do not require as much room, but they need the same care. Water should be given in sufficient quantities to thoroughly soak the ground.

When needed, liquid manure, nitrate of soda, or guano, or any other stimulant will be beneficial when growth is to be rapidly made. It is necessary to early stake and carefully tie all the tall kinds, not forgetting to thin out the growth in its early stages—4 or 5 at most in two-year-old plants; 9 to 12 in three-year-old, and 13 to 18 in four-year-old plants is about the average growth to leave. After four years it is time to get a new place for them. If the growths are taken two or three inches in length, they make fine cuttings for propagation.

Delphiniums have not many enemies, the worst being white mildew and some black potato-like destroying fungus, which are easily destroyed by the use of a weak solution of Bordeaus or other copperas mixture. The propagation of delphiniums is as readily, as easily, and as cheaply done as is that of chrysanthemums—by cuttings, at any season when they are to be had; by divisions in spring or fall and by seed in spring, raised in frames or under glass as are the general run of summer-flowering plants.

The Monterey Cypress.

With us the Monterey Cypress is a stately, well-furnished tree or hedge plant, but on its native bluffs with mature age it becomes a gnarly old veteran, fully as grizzled as any tree native to the Pacific Coast States. It is native only of Central California about Monterey.

Fine Dahlias.

The dahlia has as great a range of color as any garden perennial we grow, and every year notes an improvement in this popular flower. Those who know only the old round ball dahlias of days gone by would hardly recognize some of the modern decorative and cactus types as belonging to the same flower family.

Not all dahlias require like treatment, and in some situations and soils a few will be found to behave rather indifferently. It is best to grow a wide range for the first two years, and at the end of that time discard those that do not produce abundantly and satisfactorily. It is well to make two or three plantings of dahlias if you succeed in holding the roots dormant until quite late in the spring. Often the season has much to do with excellence of blossom, and if you have planted all at once, the whole lot may turn out poorly. Dahlias are gross feeders, and should be well supplied with food and drink, more especially from the time the buds show. From this time until blooming season is over, they must never suffer for water.

Ornate Oxalis.

Many bulbous oxalis are well worth cultivating on account of both handsome flowers and foliage, and several kinds do well in Southern California. The principal danger to be guarded against in the growing oxalis is putting bulbs in too thickly, those crowding the soil with too many roots and starving the plants. Grown in this way, they may produce few flowers which last but a brief period.

O. hirata is a good plant, keeping rather close to the soil. The flowers are on single stems, three or four inches long, and do not droop like those of some of the other species. The bulbous oxalis close their flowers during the night and during dull weather. This species in addition to its upright habit is attractive even when closed, as the color of the buds contrasts well with the grayish-green leaves.

Oxalis cernua is the Bermuda buttercup. With rather light, rich soil, a single bulb will give a surprising number of flowers. In this species they last only a few weeks, being of a fragile nature, but they are well worth growing because of the extreme beauty and profusion of flowers during the short season of bloom.

O. rubricaulis is grown principally on account of the stems and branches being of a brilliant red color. The flowers are pale rose, and not many of them to a plant. Being a procumbent habit, it is suitable for hanging baskets. The best species for all for this purpose is the old O. versicolor. Some bulbs started in small pots and transferred to baskets, make beautiful objects for hanging in a cool observatory. They flower during midwinter.

O. Bowiei is the largest-leafed species of the genus, and one of the easiest to grow. It has large rose-colored flowers on long stems. They should be started into growth the end of September.

The dwarf form of O. lactifora is one of our best window flowering plants if given an abundance of light and plenty root room. O. Multiflora and O. Malba are well known for this purpose. A species under the name crydentelles is well suited for basket work. For late flowering in the open border the bulbs should be planted out not later than the end of August. Bowiei, O. hirata rosacea and O. crydentelles all do well under those conditions.

Flowering Shrubs.

A group of spring flowering shrubs of especial merit are the genistas and cytisi, interspersed with various other beautiful members of the pea family; of these, not the least attractive is the old-fashioned broom (Spartium junceum,) blooming almost continuously. Among the cytisi are many coming from Spain, with white and yellow fragrant flowers, especially the white forms, known in Europe as Spanish bloom. The genistas also give many very attractive plants, but from the prevalence of yellow and white flowers, if we want variety, we may use a few plants of Polygalas, especially P. apopetata, and a charming little Hardenburgia which makes a climber as well as an attractive shrub with purple and blue flowers. A specimen of the Cassias or buttercup, if for only its free flowering habit, should be included in this list.

A Face of Velvet

How women covet a fresh, smooth, satiny complexion and what a satisfaction and peace of mind its possession brings. The lines of age, worry and overwork (deadly enemies of a woman's beauty), are rendered well-nigh powerless by Mrs. Nettie Harrison's Lola Montez Creme. Other Cremes fail to produce the delightful sensation of refreshing coolness and relaxation to a dry, drawn or chapped skin. Its remarkable healing and soothing effect immediately follows the first application, and most important it does not promote the growth of down upon the face. For wrinkles and massage it is simply ideal—one trial discloses its exclusive individuality. Would-be imitators have utterly failed in their efforts to learn its secret. A sample, with a copy of my book, "Secret of Beauty and Good Health," sent free on request. Price per jar (Three months' Treatment,) 75c, at all first-class druggists.

EDUCATION IN CIVICS.

URGENT NEED OF THE CULTIVATION OF GOOD TASTE.

WE have urgent need of more education along civic improvement lines. We of the present generation are getting well to the fore, but we need to stamp the importance of the subject indelibly upon the minds of the young. What we want to do is to teach the children taste; get taste into the child; get taste into the household and then finally taste into the community, and when we have done this, we need not fear the results.

The lack of taste in the community generally is an unfortunate fact, notwithstanding our grand school system, and may be attributed, in large degree, to the failure to appreciate its necessity by our educators. Reform in many branches of public improvement would be far easier of accomplishment now had the children of the previous generation been trained in the fundamental principles of taste, the power of perceiving, appreciating and discovering beauty and excellence. The more we consider the curriculum of our public schools, the more we perceive how it could be improved to meet the changing conditions of our American life. Our children need far more than the three R's to fit them for citizenship as it is dawning upon us. The atmosphere and appurtenances of the schoolroom should tend to impart culture and taste, which in turn is transferred to the home, and thus ministers to the general upbuilding.

The Central Citrus Belt.

During the past week the writer has been sojourning at Porterville, the metropolis of the central citrus belt.

One who has lived long in Southern California feels more at home in Porterville than at any other point north of the Tehachepi Mountains. There may be seen the extensive orange groves and palm trees of our section, and the progressive spirit of the citizens have made the town so attractive that it compares favorably with the foothill towns of the San Gabriel Valley.

As one rides through Central California, he is generally impressed with the lack of civic improvement manifest; more especially in the absence of street trees. Very few residents care for fine views, for all of them are content to live in the low lands or valley floors until you near San Francisco. But to this state of affairs Porterville is an exception, for the town is well provided with street trees (though more are needed,) and already houses are being built on the hillsides and new and more elevated tracts are constantly being put upon the market.

Pacific Coast Palms.

Our streets and roadways should, on the score of patriotism alone, be planted with our two Pacific Coast species of fan palms, W. Sonoreae and W. Gracilis. Both are native to Lower California, and both were at one time thought to be variations of the one native to this State (W. filifera,) but all nurserymen now fully understand the differences of the three species. The two first named are well worthy of extensive planting on our streets.

Wild Clematis.

Comparatively few people are aware that in California we have two showy species of wild clematis. Both are well worthy of cultivation, and a great deal of money is spent for poorer vines. The lowland species (C. ligusticifolia) has small creamy-white flowers borne in a profusion of clusters all over the vine. The foothill species (C. lasiantha) has much larger flowers of the same color, and is one of our showiest plants during the blooming season. In the interior cañons where it climbs over the trees and shrubs, a vine of it at a distance often gives the impression of a white pyramid, so floriferous is the plant. Both species are easily transplanted in the late fall or very early spring, and would make fine arbor plants.

Camellias.

Few people are successful in the culture of camellias (or "japonicas," as many call them.) In the first place, much of our California soil and climate is against them. They do not like dry heat or a dry, sandy soil. They will do best near the coast, but where planted inland, can be made to thrive if soil and other conditions are proper. The situation should be such that shade will be afforded them during the hottest weather, either by adjacent buildings or trees. It is well to remember that soil cannot contain too much humus for the camellia, and a liberal quantity of leaf mold mixed in will go far toward making their culture a success. Careful attention must be paid to the watering, as the soil must never be kept too wet or too dry, but moist at all times. When growing, they will stand liberal fertilizing with well-rotted cow manure and a mulch of such material during the hot weather cannot fail to be beneficial. Camellias do not take kindly to a vigorous pruning; the best way is to keep them in shape by "pinching" the tips of the branches just after the blooming season and before the new growth starts.

Petunias.

Petunias are among the most desirable flowering plants we have, and will endure all kinds of treatment, though responding nobly to proper care. Those who have been accustomed to growing from seed only do not know what a good petunia is. During the last few years wonderful progress has been made in the development of this popular flower. Go to a nursery and get some single petunias that have been grown from cuttings of a select strain, and you will never use seedlings again. The double ones lack beauty and distinctness of form, and do not flower so freely as the single ones.

Just Grass.

The following beautiful sentiment on grass by the late John J. Ingalls is worthy of reproduction anywhere and everywhere. It is much to be regretted that in Southern California the grass does not "come creeping, creeping everywhere," as it does in the eastern part of our country, and it is doubtful if anything we have, except superior climate, fully compensates us for its absence.

"Lying in the sunshine among the buttercups and the dandelions of May, scarcely higher in intelligence than the minute tenants of that mimic wilderness, our earliest recollections are of grass; and when the fitful fever is ended, and the foolish wrangle of the market and forum is closed, grass heals over the scar which our descent into the bosom of the earth has made and the carpet of the infant becomes the blanket of the dead. Grass is the forgiveness of nature—her constant benediction. Fields trampled with battle, saturated with blood, torn with the ruts of cannon, grow green again with grass, and carnage is forgotten. Streets abandoned by traffic become grass-grown like rural lanes, and are obliterated. Forests decay, harvests perish, flowers vanish, but grass is immortal.

"Beleaguered by the sullen hosts of winter, it withdraws into the impregnable fortress of its subterranean vitality, and emerges upon the first solicitation of spring. Sown by the winds, by the wandering birds, propagated by the subtle horticulture of the elements which are its ministers and servants, it softens the rude outline of the world. Its tenacious fibers hold the earth in its place and prevent its soluble components from washing into the wasting sea. It invades the solitude of deserts, climbs the inaccessible slopes and forbidding pinnacles of mountains, modifies climates and determinates the history, character and destiny of nations. Unobtrusive and patient, it has immortal vigor and aggression. Banished from the thoroughfares and the field, it abides its time to return, and when vigilance is relaxed, or the dynasty has perished, it silently resumes the throne from which it has been expelled, but which it never abdicates. It bears no blazonry of bloom to charm the senses with fragrance or splendor, but its homely hue is more enchanting than the lily or the rose. It yields no fruit in earth or air, and yet should its harvest fail for a single year, famine would depopulate the world."

Snakes of East Africa.

For one thing East Africa must have credit; snakes are not numerous, as they are in the south, at least I never have seen many. There are pythons, but they do not appear to be dangerous. I shall never forget how, down in South Africa during the war, I once awoke and found a black mwamba in bed with me.

This snake is absolutely deadly. It frightened me so that after the whole thing was over I went out and was sick. Fortunately, I was quite ignorant of the fact that it was under the blankets with me and rolled out unconcernedly. Had I known it was there, in all probability it would have struck me.—[Forest and Stream.

Practical Poultry Culture in the Southwest.

DEVOTED TO THE INTERESTS OF STANDARD-BRED POULTRY AND THE PEOPLE WHO GROW IT.

THE CAYUGA DUCK.

A WIDELY KNOWN BIRD THAT ORIGINATED IN CENTRAL NEW YORK.

By Henry W. Kruckeberg.

NOTE.—Short articles of a practical nature are cordially solicited from breeders and fanciers, relating their experience with poultry, giving their successes as well as failures. The writer will be glad, in so far as lies in his power, to answer inquiries of public interest bearing on any phase of an enlightened poultry culture, such as feeding and management, disease and its prevention, market conditions, fancy points, etc. The co-operation of utility breeders and fanciers is cordially solicited, to the end that the best thought and practice in an enlightened poultry culture may find a healthy expression in these columns.

DUCK culture has not assumed with us the importance that it enjoys in the New England States, New York, Ohio, and as far west as the Missouri Valley. In part this is due to the arid climate, though with the advent of irrigated fields and the cultivation of the land, it has made some progress of late years. The two chief varieties in this State are the Indian Runner and White Peking, with here and there a sprinkling of Muscovies and Aylesbury. The Cayuga is said to have originated in New York State, and takes its name from Cayuga Lake, by which it is known in all countries. It is classed as a table variety; color of flesh and skin white, legs and feet dull orange, color of egg shell rather dark green.

In economical values the Cayuga are fair layers which quality might have been greatly enhanced had the breed been taken up along breeding gauge lines like the White Peking and Indian Runner. When well grown, the carcass carries a considerable amount of flesh on the breast which is of good flavor. In character, the variety is hardy and the ducklings can be easily grown excepting where in-breeding has been followed to a fine point for the production of exhibition birds. As with poultry, the demand of the markets is for a yellow-skinned carcass with yellow legs; obviously this is a mere prejudice, and has no bearing whatever upon the eating qualities of the meat. The Cayugas are often crossed with other breeds, notably the White Peking, which produces quick-growing ducklings that are excellent in flavor of flesh. This is not, however, to be commended, as it is always best to preserve a breed and variety in its purity.

In type of body, the Cayugas are long, wide and thick from the back to the keel; the breast well forward, line of body level with the ground; neck is long, tapering to the head, and well arched and the bill long and flat; wings are large and carried well up; tail is full and carried fully behind, the drake having two or three curled feathers; legs are rather long, keeping the body well above ground; plumage is deep metallic black with great brilliancy on the wings; eye black and the bill of a slaty dark color. When well bred, the males will weigh as high as eight pounds, and the females about seven.

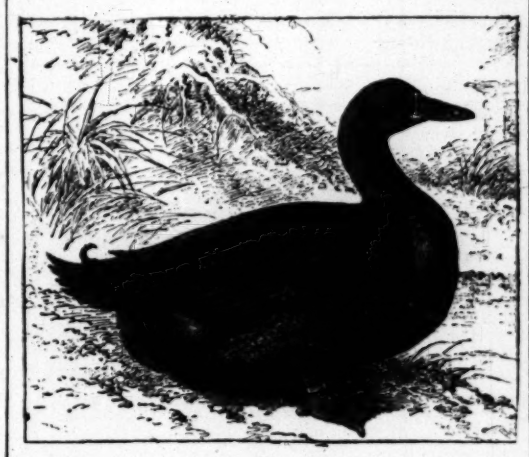
What's the Use.

In reading one of the leading authorities on poultry culture in England we notice the enumeration of no less than three so-called "new" breeds solely on the grounds of color of plumage. First, there is the Blue Leghorn, second the Blue Orpington, and third the Blue Wyandotte. These for the most part are crosses, bred for a few generations, hence more or less tainted with mongrelism. Rarely do they breed true to color qualities, even though they all are self-colored specimens, hence afford but little satisfaction to the commercial breeder, in spite of the fact that they are alluring to the fancier because exercising his skill as a breeder in so managing his stock that the faults shall become less in the same ratio that perfection is attained. In scrutinizing these blue-colored arrivals on the poultry carpet, we fail to learn that they possess any economic values in any way superior to the standard breeds belonging to the same classes and varieties. "Then why breed them," the novice may well ask. Surely, there are already a sufficient number of kinds of fowl to satisfy many tastes, and since their commercial value is not enhanced by color of plumage, it would seem a mere waste of energy.

Of all self-colored breeds, those calling for blue or dove color in plumage like the Blue Andalusians, are indeed hard to breed true to color. Blue in the wild breeds nearly always comes true, as note the California dove, but when the color is the result of a mixture of bloods, there is no telling what shades and varieties of color may not "come," no matter how careful the mating. There will be all shades from a pale gray-blue to an almost jet-black. For this reason, the novice with a fancy or an itching for the Blue Leghorn or Wyandotte will have plenty to keep him thinking and guessing in "breeding up" a strain that shall become fixed in color qualities. If he succeeds in the course of numbers of generations, he will be doing well. Our advice is to stay with the standard breeds, and if he has ambition and patience to enhance their utilitarian qualities and also to intensify their beauty and permanency of type and plumage, our word for it, he will find much to interest him, and also much to tax his knowledge of fowl life along standard and fancy lines.

Change the Tune.

Is it not about time to let up for a moment on the "glorious climate" and the "land of sunshine" times? To be sure, both are great assets of Southern California, but by themselves, they will not pay the rent nor liquidate a grocery bill. The country has other resources worthy of exploitation. The average person attached to the soil back East either as a breeder of poultry or as a grower of fruits and vegetables knows about the Land of Afternoon and its contingent of lotus eaters much as he knows about Patagonia and the Riviera—it's always a long way off. What he wants to know about are the practical things of life—ways and means of making a living for his family. As a matter of fact, climate is but an incident to the real values the country has to offer. The man or woman who creates wealth out of a barren soil has quite as much of a place in our rural economies as the leisure class who buy climate with a bit of earth thrown in for them to perch on. The poultry breeder back East contending with four to six months of snow and ice will of course appreciate climate, but what will appeal to him more is land—its value and its capable productions. Thousands of acres await the tickling of plow and harrow, while other thousands are well adapted to live stock and poultry. Is it not about time that some of our Chambers of Commerce, Boards of Trade, county promotion committees, and immigration societies yelled less about climate, and more about live stock, dairying and poultry culture? Isn't it about time to give the American business hen a boost, so that she may be afforded an opportunity to supply our home markets with hen fruit and carcass? An industry that ranks first in economic importance is certainly worthy of encouragement even in the climate literature of Southern California, which soars among the clouds rather than on terra firma. Get down to the grass, gentlemen, and do a scratching business with the feathery biped. It will pay.



A CAYUGA DRAKE.

Coburn, the Chanticleer of Kansas.

Coburn of Kansas is a name to conjure with. Not only is he satisfied to tell us what is not the matter with Kansas, but he is so contented to sing the praises of the soil products of his State, that a United States Senatorship has no allurements for him. He has sung the praises of alfalfa; he has rhapsodized over the porcine quadruped of his favorite prairie farms; he has scintillated sweetly over Kansas corn and wheat; and in his latest poesy entitled "The Idyls of Kansas" his muse soars above the din of the market place to tell us in words that strike the loud earth breathless of what Chanticleer and Biddy are doing for the farmer rich under his guiding hand. Just listen to this song redolent with big things financially, and then ask yourself "Does poultry pay!"

"Eggs and poultry of Kansas, produced in one year, are worth more than the production of gold in any year, with two exceptions, since 1493. For each of the years beginning with 1904 and ending with 1908, Kansas produced eggs and poultry as follows: 1904, $7,551,871; 1905, $8,541,153; 1906, $9,085,896; 1907, $10,300,082; 1908, $9,306,651. Counting the poultry products consumed at home the crop in Kansas for 1907 was about $34,000,000. The income from the poultry yards would have paid 93 per cent. of all the taxes, State, county and municipal, levied in 1907, and a trio of Kansas counties sold enough poultry and eggs to more than wipe out the State debt."

At times, there has been something the matter with Kansas politics, but in the light of the above web-and-feather facts, the Kansas hen is all right.

The Best Green Food.

A correspondent from Ontario writes to know our opinion as to the best green food for poultry. Strictly speaking, there is no "best" food, as the greatest results are obtained by feeding a variety. In a well-balanced ration of green foods, alfalfa easily occupies first place, being rich in those elements which go to the making of a carcass as well as eggs. It should, however, be fed with occasional changes, such as cabbage, lettuce, onions, Swiss chard, beets, etc. It can safely constitute 70 per cent. of the greenery fed to poultry. Birds in the wild feed on a variety of vegetable and animal (insect) matter, including a variety of seeds. Under domestication, the same general principles should be observed.

Ills and Their Remedies.

W. M. Elwell of the Sierra Vista ranch writes instructively as follows on some of the subjects already discussed in this department:

"In the Times magazine I note that you wish some reader to explain why a hen is liable to lay a double-shelled egg, and as I have often thought that I would write a few short articles on some of my personal experience with poultry, I will answer this question regarding the double-shelled egg, or egg within an egg. In the hen's effort to expel the small-sized egg, an abnormal contraction forces it back up the oviduct. It is there caught in the albumen of a descending yolk, a shell is then formed, and this causes the egg within an egg. I might also say that the cause for such a strange egg is inflammation of the egg organ.

"Nearly every one has trouble with brooder chicks eating the toes of one of the others, and often they will kill half the flock in this way. I have noticed that by sprinkling the brooders with sandy loam instead of sand the chick is not nearly so liable to pick at the toes of one of its companions. Before I did this, I used to have trouble with this toe eating, which is sometimes called cannibalism. For a cure, I put pure chloro-naptholeum on the little chick's affected foot and put it back in the brooder; the others will refuse to pick at it further, as the solution is offensive to them.

"Many of your readers are no doubt bothered with fleas on little chicks, and this pest is known to have ruined whole flocks. I know of one woman who has recommended to use 'corrosive sublimate,' but any one who knows anything about the drug knows that it is not the thing to use on birds or animals, and it is a foolish suggestion. However, I read it in one of the Coast-published magazines. Carbolated vaseline can be obtained at any of the drug stores, and when rubbed on little chicks' heads where the fleas are, will surely kill the fleas and will not injure the little ones in the least. A solution of creolin sprayed about the coop will keep fleas away.

THE MONTH OF MAY.

'Tis springtime now, and from each bough
Where sits a bird, there comes a song.
While, whistling from behind his plow,
The cheerful farmer plods along,
Followed by blackbirds unafraid—
They flutter from the nearest shade;
For this the month of May was made.

Vibrant the air with perfumes rare
Of woods and flowers and fresh-turned earth,
And odors apple blossoms bear;
Of all sweet smells there is no dearth—
Like scents from Paradise estrayed,
Or Cupid's breath when he has prayed;
For this the month of May was made.

All Nature's things, if buds or wings,
Feel now a new life through them move,
The mourning heart forgets and sings,
And all Creation strives to prove
The earth in robes of green arrayed,
A symphony by springtime played;
For this the month of May was made.

L'ENVOI.

Lady, have you not felt the thrill
That stirs the pulse at such a time,
When over meadow, wood and hill
All Nature moves with Love's own rhyme
To make amends for joys delayed?
For this the month of May was made.

GORDON CALMAR

A Lovable Coyote.

A pet coyote belongs to Roy Calloway, a Dallas boy, who declares that coyotes can be made tamer than dogs. This particular coyote came from Stamford in Western Texas when two and a half months old. It is now a little over a year old and fully grown.

This pet plays with the children, lying down to be rubbed by them, and frolicking about the yard with them. She likes to play with dogs, but the dogs object. The coyote sits on her box and waits for Roy to come home in the evening, and shows her pleasure when she sees him.

"I don't think," Roy says, "that any dog could be more lovable than my coyote is."—[Dallas News.

South Carolina Horse Swappers.

The horse swapper's business is rather flourishing in this section just now. Many old plugs change hands and many jockeys are made to rejoice for a short while at least until they find out that the other fellow knew something that he forgot to tell; then he loses confidence in his former friend—and doesn't look upon him as being the pink of perfection as he did before; but they get better as soon as they have time to think it all over and realize that this is not the first time the trick has been turned, and probably not the last. Perhaps the other fellow will do the turning next time.—[Calhoun X-Ray.

His Afternoon Out.

When Carthorse Leander Tried to Swim the Hudson.

From New York Sun.

NO matter what may be the best way to lead a horse on land, whether by forelock, mane or nose, the only part of a horse by which he may be led in the water is his ears. Where a fractious land horse may be handled if you grasp him firmly by the nose, this treatment only makes a submarine horse turn somersaults and tires him out without accomplishing the purpose of the treatment.

Moreover, no self-respecting horse, land or water, will stand for the smell of ammonia. The fumes go up inside his nose and tickle him and make his spirit revolt against his human master and all his works.

All of which was demonstrated yesterday afternoon, when Ed Fennell, whose father, John Fennell, runs an awning business, was about half-way through unloading folding chairs from a delivery wagon on the pier at the foot of West Ninety-sixth street. There was a little social affair on for last night aboard the Naval Reserve ship Granite State, which is moored at the pier, and the chairs were for the guests.

The single horse attached to the light covered wagon stood peacefully surveying the Jersey shore while chair after chair was taken from the wagon and carried up the gangplank. Since he was accustomed to that sort of job, it is likely that there would have been no trouble at all had not a tug towing a string of barges come up rather suddenly and rather close to the pier. When it was opposite the pier, the tug gave a mighty toot, all out of proportion to its size. The horse did not even wait to prick up his ears, but gave several leaps, which took him to the end of the pier, and then one more, which took him overboard. The horse and wagon got tangled with the string piece and the wagon took the initiative and reached the water first.

Ed Fennell, his two helpers and two or three of the crew of the Granite State walked down to the end of the pier and looked to see where the rest of the chairs had gone. At first they saw nothing but water. Then, after a moment, there was a mighty threshing down below somewhere, and a splash, and Leander's head butted up through the surface. Leander blinked and started for Weehawken. His blinders flapped with each oncoming wave, and the thills of the wagon, which he had taken time to detach while he was on the bottom hiding from the tug, bobbed along behind him.

The men who had Leander in charge tried to call him back, but he had decided to go out into a new country and begin life all over again. So a boat was lowered from the Granite State and Fennell and his men and a couple of seamen went after him. When they got close enough to the horse one of them reached out and took hold of his forelock and started to turn him around. But the hair was wet and slippery with the salt water and did not give any sort of a hold on a horse who had resolved to change his life. Then they tried him by the nose.

What followed is no mere hearsay. It is vouched for by several hundred persons who had gathered on the pier and along the shore. Whenever one of the men got a good grip on Leander's nose, the horse would duck his head until he had thrown the man nearly off his balance and then, as if to demonstrate the futility of such means to hold him, Leander's back would come over and then his hind quarters, and then his feet, and finally his head again. In other words, he would turn a somersault right there in the water. The men put a noose in a rope and threw that over the beast's neck, but it pinched his windpipe and he did another somersault and came up with a bunch of salt water in his lungs.

The discovery of the proper method was merely a matter of elimination after all. Given a horse's head above water and having tried his nose and the mane and forelock there isn't much left but the ears. So as a last resort, Fennell took hold of one ear and one of his assistants took hold of the other, and they pulled. To their surprise, Leander smiled pleasantly, and with a practiced kick turned himself around and headed back for Manhattan and bran mash. So far so good. But another difficulty was in store for the captors of the swimmer. They had forgotten how high a dock stands above the water.

Leander swam along by the side of the boat until he reached almost the exact spot where he had taken off for his final leap, and then thought was taken as to ways and means of hoisting him. There was no derrick in sight, and that was what was needed. Leander waited patiently while his betters were talking the matter over. Finally some one suggested that there was a beach at the foot of Ninety-ninth street, three blocks away. So with the horse in tow, held by the ears, the boat started for Ninety-ninth street. By this time the shore was well lined with spectators, and freight trains were stopping to give their crews an opportunity to watch the show.

Fearing that the horse's ears would get tired of the constant strain on them Fennell let go—and tried the same again, with the same result as before. After five or six cartwheels and backflops had been shown, he returned to the ear hold and the rest of the journey was made without incident. Off Ninety-ninth street the horse found bottom and walked ashore. He already was out of the water when his legs gave way under him and he collapsed.

A New York delivery horse, cooped up in the city all the time, has no chance for swimming, and so gets soft and flabby in its swimming muscles. Then if he starts in and overdoes the very first time he is in the water, he naturally gives out. And that is what happened to Leander. A member of the volunteer life-saving crew at the pier came around with a bottle of ammonia and applied it to the horse's nose, and with one good whiff of the sharp stuff Leander, erstwhile unconscious, was up and away—in the river.

But his keepers had learned lots of things by experience. They simply rowed out, got him by the ears and towed him in again. This time he did not collapse, but lay down for a while until he was rested, and then was driven home.

Inland by Cruiser.

A British Vessel's Long Trip into the Interior of Peru.

From London Standard.

[The third-class cruiser Pelorus, of 1100 tons, has just returned to Devonport from making an adventurous trip up the Amazon for 2300 miles as far as Iquitos, and thus carrying the Union Jack almost across the South American continent, and to regions where no warship of any size had ever before been seen.

The vessel, which belonged to the South African station, joined the second cruiser squadron of Sir Percy Scott at Monte Video. The Pelorus is 300 feet long with 36½ feet beam, and 135 tons displacement. It possesses a 2-inch steel deck protection, and is armed with 8.4 inch guns, with quickfirers and torpedo tubes. It can, at full pressure, steam about 20 knots an hour.]

WHEN the Pelorus left South Africa at the beginning of October we on board little thought that in about three months we should find ourselves sailing up the Amazon into the heart of South America to a point 2300 miles away from the ocean.

We reached Rio de Janeiro on November 19, two weeks ahead of the second cruiser squadron; from thence we went on to Buenos Ayres, where the British residents gave us all sorts of entertainment. We were ordered to meet the second cruiser squadron at Monte Video, and, after a fortnight's stay at Buenos Ayres, we sailed to the rendezvous. Here, for a short and glorious time, we became the flagship of the squadron.

It was not for our general excellence or for our fighting capacity that we were chosen to hoist the vice-admiral's flag. We were, alas! among the smallest of the ships of war present, and because of that smallness, which allowed us to get into the inner harbor at first, we were the "shore" telegraph station, the vessels of the squadron, which lay five miles out, because of their heavy draught, communicating through us with the people ashore. This was very necessary, for the wireless telegrams dealing with projected entertainments alone kept our operators busy. Nor was it possible for the heavier ships to get up to Buenos Ayres, and so it was that we flew Sir Percy's flag and carried him and his officers to that city on the 17th. We were back again eight days later, and we were then detailed for a trip up the Amazon.

We left Monte Video two days after Christmas, arriving at Pernambuco on January 4, and at Para on the 11th. Para is the port on the mouth of the Amazon, and, although in every sense a seaport, is very seldom visited by British men-of-war, and the enthusiastic and kindly reception given to us by the British residents was a foretaste of the festivities which were to be held in our honor throughout the trip. In return for the hospitality shown to us, Capt. Craig gave a lunch on board and an "At Home." In all we were eight days at Para, and every day the residents contrived to find some new form of kindness to show us. The men fared as well as the officers. Para was but the threshold of our enterprise—a day's steaming beyond was the Amazon proper, virgin water for a British warship.

Night on the Amazon.

Charts there were of a kind, but none that was very useful to us. We took on board native pilots, but, on the whole, the navigation of the river did not present any particularly difficult problems. Some of the bends were ticklish things to negotiate, but we had plenty of water from start to finish. Men were, of course, constantly in the "chains," but the depth necessitated the use of the patent log. The current—running sometimes at five knots—was against us all the way up, and our progress was necessarily slow.

Although it is the practice for the river boats to steam night and day along this great uncharted stream, Capt. Craig anchored every night at sundown. He would choose, whenever possible, the neighborhood of one of the large villages that are scattered up and down the river. Off one of these we would drop our anchor and wait for the heat. With the ship under way, there was an artificial breeze that tempered the burning rays of the sun; but when the ship was at anchor, with not a breath stirring, the heat would seem to rise from the forests about and overwhelm one. The men wore the thinnest of flannels, and no "jumpers," but that was too much, and the unfortunate men whose duty lay in the stoke hole and the engine-room wore little or nothing.

With night would come the mosquitoes in clouds, and life on the top deck would sometimes be unendurable. The men sought refuge in their messes, where the mosquito netting to port holes and doors offered a fairly effective barrier to the tiny pests. Of course, we were a source of great wonder and joy to the villagers. They would paddle out to us, and round us, and whenever it was possible would come on board.

I shall never forget those nights on the silent river. On either hand lonely banks, where the forest came down to the water's edge, and above the big stars, which were reflected in the ever-moving river. Strange animal cries came from the forest, and sometimes in the early dawn one caught a momentary glimpse of some animal slinking down to drink. In the midst of this wild scene lay a sleek white cruiser, and above the strange forest calls would sometimes rise a sound like the rattling of dried peas in a tin canister, as the wireless man on the Pelorus sent or received a message from far-away Para.

One night, to the intense delight of the natives, we got our searchlight to work, and one wondered what the people who live away from the river thought when they saw the erratic beams of light stabbing the sky or wheeling restlessly over the countryside.

We arrived at Manaos on the 26th, and were now close on a thousand miles from Para. This town is, properly speaking, not on the Amazon at all, but on the Rio Negro, twelve miles above its confluence with the Amazon. The whole population—and I understand it is between 15,000 and 20,000—came out to welcome us. The British residents were, of course, first to hail our coming, but the native population vied one with another in demonstrating their good feeling. Newspapers struggling magnificently with English offered us in that language their felicitations, and football matches were arranged and enthusiastically played.

Every café in the town was open to the men, and the money they offered in payment respectfully declined. It may be of interest at this point to say that although the men had the greatest freedom, and although hospitality was lavish and drinks were free in every town we touched, remarkable moderation was shown by the men, and there was no "crime"—in the naval sense this means insignificant misdemeanors—among the ship's company. The trip illustrated the excellent self-discipline of the British sailor, and is in a sense a very sensible tribute to the popularity of Commander Craig. Of the company of over 300 men some forty were teetotalers.

Festivities were the order of the day, as at Para, only on a larger scale. Every day brought some new device for amusing us.

Charm of the Forest.

After a stay of ten days, we bade farewell to our new friends in the heart of South America, and, returning to the Amazon, we continued our journey up the river.

Watches were kept and duties performed exactly as if we had been at sea, and this was so even at night when the ship was at anchor.

Perhaps it was because we were not on the river long enough for the scenery to become monotonous, but, speaking for myself, the strangeness of our surroundings never lost its fascinations. The river itself, its history, its very vastness, had a charm; but the impenetrable forests that stretch out on either hand had a mystery of their own that held you breathless. One needed little imagination to extract from them dream stories of unknown lands, of peoples lost to ken in their gloomy depths, of other races than the world knows living their lives, ignorant of a humanity outside the interlacing barriers of the liana, that rank vine which binds tree to tree and forms nature's fence against advancing civilization.

Tabatinga is the frontier town between Brazil and Peru, and this was reached on the 14th, and two days later we reached our destination—Iquitos, in Peru—having steamed 2300 miles up the Amazon.

If one may judge by the reception we received, the arrival of H.M.S. Pelorus was the event of the century. All Iquitos made holiday. The streets and houses were a-flutter with flags and bunting. The Peruvian flag and the Union Jack floated everywhere, and the latter ensign was at a premium. I heard of one merchant who made a corner in Union Jacks two days before our arrival, and decorated his house from roof to basement with these ensigns. Very unwisely he began the work of decoration the day before we arrived, and a frenzied population having frantically and fruitlessly scoured the town to secure "Jacks," if they were only the size of a pocket handkerchief, were confronted in their poverty with this blatant display. It was more than human nature could stand. In the decent darkness cautious and stealthy hands stole the flags, and in the morning the house was bare of decoration by Union Jacks, and white and red ensigns floated proudly on flagstaffs and housetops which the day previous had been innocent of bunting.

Four Hundred Miles from the Pacific.

Our stay at Iquitos was one of seven days—seven crowded days they were, with functions ashore and afloat, with dinners and parties, dances, football matches, cricket matches, and tugs-of-war. For the benefit of sporting readers I might add that our association team won both at Manaos and Iquitos, our cricket team was beaten at Para and Manaos, but our tug-of-war team won on both occasions at Para and Iquitos.

At Iquitos, we were only 400 miles distant from the Pacific, and this fact will probably convey to the reader more vividly than anything I have written the character of our friendly "penetration." You may be sure that with a well-knit ship's company like ours the whole excursion was regarded in the light of a pleasure trip, and according to a man's nature so did he extract enjoyment from its many aspects. We had amateur photographers, singers, and athletes, who found plenty of scope for their various gifts. We had the log keepers—serious diarists who kept a careful note of all that happened, but were somewhat stumped for material when they had described the width of the river and the peculiarities of the mosquito. We had some men who were frankly satiated with entertainment, and one of these was a stoker, who hid himself below one night at Iquitos, and when discovered passionately refused to be entertained any more.

We had the curio collectors who littered the messes with bird and beast and implement. None of these latter was as fortunate as Capt. Craig, who secured a young tiger, which is to be presented to the Zoölogical Society in London.

The run down the river was faster, for we had the current with us. Manaos was reached on March 1 and Para on the 9th. Manaos gave us a farewell, and the night before our leaving for Para we had a big concert on board which all the British residents attended.

Since leaving Simonstown, and by the time we had reached Devonport, we had traveled 17,000 miles and had been under way 103 days.

Farming in California—The Land and Its Products.

CONDUCTED BY J. W. JEFFREY, STATE COMMISSIONER OF HORTICULTURE.

Strict Quarantine.

A WRITER advises against the rejection of eastern peach trees found infested with borers. He says deciduous trees have been infested with borers since Adam began the cultivation of the Garden of Eden. The lot of trees in question contained the eastern peach-root borer, one of the most damaging of the tribe. This insect has so far been kept out of California altogether, and by just such strict measures as the above writer complains of. This is one of the greatest achievements of the State quarantine office, but it has been done by destroying or sending back scores of lots of trees each year. I do not think such screeds as the letter above referred to make much impression upon the public, but they may make the individual careless. At any rate, these strict quarantine regulations will not be abated.

Attacking the Thrips.

CITRUS fruit growers throughout the State should be encouraged by the fact that the Department of Agriculture has placed a competent force in the field to discover some means of controlling the thrips. This minute creature is doing immense damage already in some of the chief orange districts in the San Joaquin Valley, and its ravages are not confined to the north. I found evidence of its work in Imperial county, and it has caused some alarm in San Bernardino and other citrus counties. While the government is doing most of its work among the thrips of the deciduous fruits, a competent man has been placed at Visalia in the person of Mr. Jones, who will extend his investigations into Southern California. Although the smallest creature that damages the orange, the thrips has already done incalculable harm to the citrus fruits of more than one locality. The fruit growers of Lindsay are so certain that an investigation of this pest will be helpful that the executive committee of the Growers' Protective League has assessed its members 5 cents an acre to defray Lindsay's portion of the expense of maintaining the investigation till July 1, when the Congressional appropriation will be available. The Board of Supervisors of the county have agreed to pay one-half the expenses, and this provides the means of continuing the work to July 1.

Quarantine Modified.

THE conflict which has been raging in Tulare county over the admission of orange trees from counties south of the Tehachepi seems in a fair way of settlement. During the last few weeks several carloads of trees shipped into Tulare from the south have been returned by the commissioners on account of some scale infection found upon the stock. These trees had been shipped in on contract, and when returned, the nurserymen announced that they would not ship any more trees into that county till the quarantine regulations were modified. For some time it looked like an impending suit against the nurserymen for damages, but the air has been somewhat cleared by a late resolution of the Tulare Board of Horticultural Commissioners.

The resolution recommends that all shipments of citrus trees into the county be defoliated and scrubbed with a kerosene emulsion, or a solution of whale-oil soap. If found clean upon arrival and inspection, such shipments will be permitted to be planted. If inspection shows that the work has not been carefully done, the whole shipment will be condemned.

I would advise the use of the kerosene emulsion, and not the whale-oil soap. The latter is a very mild insecticide, and could not be depended upon to do the work. The act of defoliation is very helpful, as it removes a large portion of the scale and makes the application of the insecticide to the branches more thorough. I do not believe the defoliation of a young citrus tree is at all harmful, and some think it more beneficial than otherwise.

Citrus Treatise Exhausted.

IT may save some correspondence to announce that the bulletin on citrus fruit known as "Culture of the Citrus" is now out of print. This treatise was compiled by B. M. Lelong, about seven years ago, and who was then secretary of the State Board of Horticultural Commissioners. The work has been about the only book devoted to the cultivation of citrus fruits to be had, and has been very popular. When the means are at hand, it is the purpose of the State commission to revise or rewrite this bulletin, giving later facts upon the cultivation of these fruits and whatever additional information may be at command. Meantime do not forget that the present edition is now entirely exhausted.

Apricots Will Be Light.

THE California Fruit Exchange has issued a bulletin, showing the crop conditions in various fruit-growing districts.

The bulletin says that in Vacaville an average crop of cherries is expected, but that the Royal Annes will be light.

Apricots will be light, the crop being only 10 or 15 per cent. of normal.

The peach crop will be good with the exception of the Muirs, which is not a shipping peach.

A good crop of plums is expected, although Trade, Tragedy and Kelsey plums will be a little light. French prunes are dropping and will also be light. The outlook is good for a big crop of pears.

Winters reports a light crop of apricots. Early peaches, such as Alexanders and St. Johns, are thinning themselves a little. On the whole, a fair supply of shipping peaches is anticipated. Crawfords and Fosters are a little light, but it is expected there will be a good many to ship.

Prospects are favorable for plums. Burbanks and Red Junes are a little lighter than usual. Clymans are showing light and Wicksons are light. The outlook is good for a big crop of Tragedys. Grand Duke and late plums are showing good. A good crop of pears is expected. Prunes will be light.

In Placer county, a good crop of cherries is expected. All varieties of shipping peaches are showing well. Clings are light in places, but on the whole, the indications are favorable for a good crop. Plums and prunes have dropped heavily, but a fair crop is expected with the exception of Kelseys, Satsumas and Wicksons, which are light. A good crop of pears is expected. The fruit will be larger and of better quality than last year.

Cherries are light in Newcastle, plums and peaches fair, and pears good Seedling Dates.

IMPORTED offshoots of the best varieties are expensive and difficult to secure. Moreover, since the date palm, unlike ordinary fruit trees, cannot be grafted, it is essential to know in advance what sorts can be grown with reasonable hope of success. If by any chance the wrong varieties should be planted, the orchard is likely to prove a total loss, as the palms would have to be destroyed to make place for others better suited to the locality. If fifty offshoots are planted per acre, the initial expense for the offshoots and planting will amount to from $200 to $400 per acre, and the offshoots must be cared for very carefully during the first year and protected in winter. Before such a plantation comes into bearing, it will have cost from $300 to $600 per acre.

It is possible to start a seedling date orchard at very little expense and with reasonable hope of commercial success, and with a good chance of securing superlatively fine varieties which can be gotten in no other way. It is true that date varieties do not come true to seed, and about one-half of the seedlings are male, but it has been found, nevertheless, that in the warmer parts of Arizona and Southeastern California, a considerable proportion of the seedlings yield edible fruit. In the Salton Basin, for instance, it is safe to count on nearly half of the female trees yielding marketable fruit, although, of course, they would vary widely in time of ripening and in quality of fruit. When seed of good varieties is planted, from one-tenth to one-fourth of the fertile trees will probably yield fruit of first quality. —[Indio Index.

Propagating by Cuttings.

ONE of the simplest methods of propagating many plants is by means of cuttings or slips. A cutting or slip is simply a detached portion of a plant, upon which there are buds or leaves, and which, under proper conditions, will start roots and branches. In their section, care should be taken to secure only portions of strong, healthy plants, otherwise the resulting plants will be puny and unsatisfactory.

Very many of our deciduous fruits and some evergreens may be propagated from cuttings, among them figs, quinces, olives, grapes, currants, gooseberries, etc. These are known as hardwood cuttings, and must be made during the dormancy of the plant and from wood of last season's growth. A warm location and sandy loam are the best conditions for starting cuttings of hardwood plants. They should be inserted in the soil up to the last bud, which is left exposed, and left undisturbed. When the warm weather of spring comes, the sap in the cuttings begins to circulate and a callus will form at the lower end and in a short time small rootlets will start from this wart-like callus and a new plant will form. In many cases, as with grapes, currants, etc., roots will start not alone from the callus, but from the buds which are under ground and form a root system along the whole buried portion of the cutting. In such cases, and perhaps in all, it is best to remove all buds from the underground portion of the cutting before it is inserted, as there will always be a tendency to throw out suckers and cause trouble later on. The best time for planting hardwood cuttings is in the early spring.—[Orchard and Farm.

Training Fruit Trees.

AN expert can make a vine of an apple or a pear tree, a tree of a gooseberry or currant bush, or a snake of either. He will twist, pinch and fondle the descendant of some mighty apple tree, with its gnarled branches and its forty-foot spread measuring, planning and nursing until instead of assuming the shape of its parent it will grow to fit some space on the side of his house, hugging the wall like a vine, or possibly will form a screen to hide his kitchen porch.

In the rich man's garden abroad we see all sorts of curious forms to which fruit trees have been trained. Some are beautiful, some are freakish, but all are wonderful. In vases, lyres, shields, crests, monograms, soldiers, beautiful maidens, the apple or pear tree and the currant bush lose their identity.

Those that are trained like vines, says Country Life in America, certainly possess a distinctive decorative value. In the old days every estate in England worth while had a specimen box tree—a superior example of topiary work—which was pruned to resemble Queen Elizabeth.

In the poor man's garden abroad, a trained fruit tree finds its greatest usefulness. No garden is too small for a few trees. The peasant, with a scant six inches or a foot between his walk and his neighbor's fence still has room to plant a tree and train it against a lattice. While the necessity for maximum returns from minimum acres is not a part of our national point of view, the possibility of the training of trees as a hobby has been very much overlooked.

In Germany you can buy a tree to measure to fill in any space on your garden wall or house, just as we buy a ready-made suit of clothes. While the training of fruit trees has become popular only within ten years, the Formobstbaumschulen, or schools where trees are trained, are now to be found everywhere in Germany. There are commercial nurseries where experts in espalier work are constantly making new forms and creating new marvels. Certain shapes have become standard, such as pyramids, cordons, palmettos and so on.

There are practically no nurseries in America that have taken up the propagation and sale of trained fruit trees in a serious way, and there is almost no American literature on the subject; consequently one who wishes to take this work up as a hobby will be forced to look to Germany, France or England for his inspiration and for his stock.—[Chronicle.

Gardening in California—Flower and Vegetable.

Old-Fashioned Flowers.

At this time of the year flower gardens are blooming with spring flowers. And the acacias and all other trees and flowering shrubbery are at the height of perfection.

California, however, has the advantage of the entire United States in many different ways. Her climate is good, neither too hot, or too cold, so that almost anything may be grown here with very little trouble or expense. Such things that have to be nursed and stored in the winter back East, may be grown here with very little trouble or expense. Such things that have to be nursed and stored in the winter back East may be grown to perfection here in our sunny clime.

And yet, there are many things still in demand. People are not only looking for something new, but are looking for the old-fashion shrubbery.

"Give me the old-fashion lilac and I am satisfied. It so much reminds me of home," said a lady from the East.

In the past such things as lilac have been looked upon as very unsatisfactory in California. But not so, it is a great mistake; try them. Give them a trial in your back yard. There are many things in the like nature of the lilac such as the Weigela. Syringa, sometimes called mock orange, Viburnum Opulus (snowball,) the old hawthorn or May flower in white, red and pink, both double and single, and in the fall of the year are decked with berries. Stephylea Colchica, an extremely sweet-smelling shrub; Deutzia Graclis, Deutzia Crenita, double hydrangea, Paniculata, Grandiflora, several varieties Spirea such as S. Reevesi, S. Van Houtti, these two are already grown here, but there are many more worthy of a trial, such as S. Anthony Watever, S. Prunifolia, S. Douglasi, S. Paniculata, Rosea and many others. Cytisus Laburnum, sometimes called Golden Chain; Clethra Alnifolia, another beautiful sweet-smelling shrub well worthy of a trial here; Althea or the Rose of Sharon. The double flowering cherry, white and pink Forsythia Fortuni Veridissma, Hypericum Calycinum, H. Moserionum. These are a few of the many good and useful spring flowering shrubs that might be grown here in Southern California with much success.

Lilacs and other flowering shrubbery of this nature will do well if planted in a shady place, such as the north side of the house or shaded by tall trees, with plenty of water. Such is the writer's experience with them in Southern California. Truly these are deciduous and may look a little out of place in this land of sunshine, but they are things that are looked for. They are a welcome in springtime.—[Pacific Garden.

The China Aster.

WHETHER with the learned botanists we call it Callistephus hortensis or prefer the simple popular name of China aster, all will agree that it is one of the loveliest and most desirable of our annuals, and the glory of the early fall; a fit predecessor to the gigantic chrysanthemum which the same celestial empire has given us.

A Jesuit missionary introduced it into Europe from China about 1731. It was then a single flower, that is, it showed a yellowish center and had only two to four rows of flat ray petals, blue, violet or white; a two-foot tender cousin of the wild asters of our eastern roadsides.

Twenty years later, double forms were in cultivation in France and England.

In 1800 it was well known to American gardeners, and has appeared in our seed catalogues ever since.

By 1850 the painstaking Germans had greatly improved it, getting many varieties in size of plant and in shape and coloring and length of petal, and in doubleness of flowers. Careful selection has kept adding new types and colors, until nowadays it is offered in over fifteen types, and in each type in from six to even twenty distinct shades, making a total of some 250 varieties, which come practically true from seed. Some are as dwarf as six inches with inch-wide blooms, others grow over two feet tall with flowers more than five inches across.

Seedsmen's catalogues devote about as much space to the China aster as to the pansy or sweet pea, proving the profitable demand for it.

In America by far the most popular of all types is the tall branching; because of its long stems, large incurved flowers, and soft pure coloring, it is the best main crop kind for cut flowers. It was originated in the United States.

The Giant Comet and Hohenzollern varieties are the kinds with the longest and most irregular petals, approaching chrysanthemums in effect; they hail from Germany, are excellent cut flowers, and can be especially recommended for brilliant effect in beds. The Early Wonder and Queen of the Market varieties are the leaders for early cut flowers, and are of graceful open habit.

Many other almost as desirable kinds could be mentioned if space permitted.

Society has become partial to the single China asters, and they are coming to the front again; Elegance is the name of the best-liked variety; it comes in pink, white and lavender.

It is said that the young plants will stand more cold than cabbage, and certainly in this climate seed can be sown safely in flats or the open as early as February. The sowings can be continued till May, but it is usually found that the earlier sowings produce the strongest plants that bloom for the longest time.

Set the plants out, as soon as they are three inches high, twelve to sixteen inches apart, choosing a dull day or afternoon so they may not wilt. Not much water, but constant surface cultivation, is their summer need. Plenty of commercial fertilizer or rotted manure can be given provided it is well worked into the soil some little distance from the plants. Extra good results have been found where old sod has been spaded under before the plants were set. When the blooming time approaches plenty of water can be given in furrows on each side of the plants allowing it to soak in slowly and taking care that the surface is pulverized at the fitting time after each irrigation.

So far little trouble has been found from insects or fungus hereabouts. Wire worms may attack the stem if rank fiery fertilizer has been placed close enough to start trouble. Red spider is usually only seen on later sowings which not having the deep root system of the earlier plantings suffer when the hot weather comes. Little can be done to offset it out of doors.

In the East rust has to be fought. Ammoniacal carbonate of copper in water, sprayed on every week or ten days is the preferred remedy, as it does not discolor the foliage. The black beetle is another eastern pest, it preys upon the expanding flowers and disfigures them if not checked. One method of getting rid of them is to put a pint of water and a gill of benzine in a can and hold it under the bugs—they drop into it. It has to be done three times a day during the six to nine days the beetles last.

Air-slaked lime is used in the East to prevent worms and insects from eating the young roots; tobacco stems are used at a mulch to kill aphis at the roots.

Germany has been recognized for many years as the best place to buy high-grade China aster seed; the best American seed comes from the neighborhood of Rochester, N. Y., but of late California has been producing an increasing quantity of excellent seed, and if proper care is given, should get the United States trade.—[Pacific Garden.

The California Privet.

THE California privet (Ligustrum ovalifolium) has the distinction of being known abroad better than it is known at home, although it surely is appreciated here also. It is probably the ornamental plant which has constituted California's greatest gift to the world's landscape architecture, and the ways of propagating it constitute a respectable part of distant horticultural literature. It is interesting to draw phases of its popularity from the columns of recent issues of the Rural New Yorker as follows:

Mr. E. S. Black, writing from Monmouth county, New Jersey, says: "The California privet is the most popular hedge and specimen plant that is known or grown. For the past twenty years nurserymen have been increasing their plantings of cuttings, and yet the demand is greater than the supply. One grower alone planted 1,000,000 cuttings of this popular plant in the spring of 1908, and the plantings will be greater in number this spring than ever before. It is so easily grown that one might think that the plants would soon be a glut on the market, but the demand seems to keep pace with the supply, and, in fact, ahead of it. Not only is this plant popular for a hedge plant, but for beautifying the lawn it has no equal. The expert gardener with his shears finds it the easiest plant in cultivation to trim and train into all kinds of fancy or grotesque shapes. One can see standard plants of this useful shrub rivaling the beautiful bay tree, also the pyramid forms; again it is made into an easy-chair form, a bottle, a vase, a globe, or any fanciful form, according to the artistic taste of the gardener. No other plant will stand so much pruning while growing, and at the same time thrive, as will the California privet—hence its popularity. The same rule holds good with it as a cutting, it will grow under the most adverse conditions and for the most careless and inexperienced planter. At the same time, no plant will so richly reward the careful and painstaking man. In good rich soil, where it is well cared for, it gives a wealth of dark, glossy green leaves, and is one of the most beautiful foliage plants in cultivation. The best cuttings are made from wood not larger than an ordinary lead pencil, and without any side branches to cut from it. Cut about six inches long with a knife or shears; tie in bundles of 100 or more, and bury as other cuttings—tops down and bottoms up—or private cuttings can be put in a cool cellar and packed in moss, sand or sawdust, standing or almost any way, if kept cool. Plant early in spring, and as directed for planting other cuttings, except it is best to leave two or more buds or eyes above ground."

Cantaloupe Pests.

THE two principal enemies to cantaloupes thus far known in Arizona are the melon aphis and mematode worms. The aphis is especially favored by the mild climatic conditions of the Southwest, and is always to be expected even in new districts. It is much affected by extremes of temperature, being repressed by cold or wet weather and also by extreme heat. In Southern Arizona the aphis is usually in evidence early in June, increasing rapidly until the crop is harvested and the vines destroyed. Kerosene emulsion checks but does not usually exterminate the aphis, which is difficult to reach with spraying apparatus, on the under sides of the leaves where it is chiefly to be found. Preventive measures are more satisfactory than curative ones in the case of the aphis, which is first established at comparatively few points in a field by means of old females which have wintered over in protected situations. These pioneers colonize on the young vines early in the season, at which time, when the plants are small and easily treated, the grower would do well to assume the presence of aphids and spray the whole of his plantings thoroughly with kerosene emulsion, diluted thirty times.—[Arizona Bulletin.

Remarkable Rose.

ONE of the best new climbing roses. The Germans call it Tausendschon, or thousand beauties. Says the Gardener's Chronicle: "Among the newer introductions, perhaps the most notable is Tausendschon. This variety possesses very large semi-double flowers, often three inches in diameter when fully expanded. They are produced freely in loose sprays of usually four. The flowers, in their bud state, resemble in shape those of the well-known tea rose Homer, and are of a rich carmine shade, sometimes almost crimson, changing to a delightful rosy pink, with the absence of purple, when expanded, and shading to a delicate peach toward the center. The inner row of petals is slightly flaked with white. It has proved very hardy and equally as rampant in growth and as free in flowering as Crimson Rambler, which, in habit, it resembles. The foliage is of a deep, glossy green, leather-like in substance and almost evergreen. The flowers are very persistent, a valuable feature, especially in roses overhanging gravel walks, lawns, etc."

The Amateur Gardener.

TO have peas by June 17, you will do well to leave your order with the grocer on the morning of the 16th, giving him full particulars as to whether you wish them fresh or canned.

To raise very large cabbages, cauliflowers, or pumpkins, a derrick is not at all necessary. Any good hired man of ordinary physical capacity should be able to raise them as high as you wish without serious damage to his spine.

When planting your pea seeds, sow oats along with them. This will fool the crows, pigeons, horses, and other insects that prey upon the garden when there is nobody around to shoo them away.

Much backache will be saved beginners in gardening if they will remember to curb their enthusiasm and let the hired man do all the work.

Bone dust is good as a fertilizer. You will therefore do well to save all your family skeletons until spring, and then after running them through the coffee grinder, place them where they will do the most good.

If everything goes wrong with you always, no matter what you do, and you want a fine lawn, put in eight hours a day trying to raise weeds.

There is no use of trying to train cutworms to eat flowers for you. They are dull and lethargic in brain power, and have the low taste to prefer cabbages to roses.

A two-by-five toad set in the middle of your garden will be a great assistance to you in ridding it of insects. Do not get too big a toad. The capacity of a toad of the size specified is forty-seven cubic yards of insect to the minute.—[Harper's Weekly.

Foolish Mothers.

"JUST a child of 15 years; just a little, short-skirted Miss who should have been romping in school-day glee; just a girl who might innocently have cuddled a dolly in her arms—yet she pinned upon herself the scarlet letter of dishonor, disgrace, womanly shame, that by her own sacrifice she might save from the hangman's noose the brother who had slain to rescue her from the toils of one whom he held responsible for her downfall."

Such is the sickly, slushy, opening paragraph of one day's "write-up," in a local paper, of a criminal case that has been attracting much morbid curiosity in Los Angeles during the past few weeks. It is one of those "unwritten law" cases, in connection with which the sympathy of the public has been somewhat worked to death of late.

The cut accompanying the brilliant journalistic "effort" referred to, makes the "short-skirted miss" look like a hardened woman of 40 years of age, or thereabouts.

This girl had been keeping company for a couple of years with the messenger boy who was done to death on her account. Surely, there is an object lesson here—a lesson that he who runs may easily read. The mother, who first failed to give her child necessary information in regard to her sexual nature, and then permitted her, when reaching the age of puberty, to go freely with a person of the opposite sex, is guilty in this case.

The United States is full of these foolish mothers—women who will assure you that their daughters are "perfectly safe." Yes, so is a gasoline stove.

Perhaps you will ask: How about the fathers? A woman correspondent writes in reference to Mothers' Day, suggesting that we should have a "Fathers' Day" also, when the responsibility of fatherhood might be insisted upon. This is all true, but the special duty of the fathers along this line is to attend to the sexual education and oversight of their sons, while the special duty of the mother is to look after those of their children who, belonging to her own sex, can better understand her.

We have had much gushing of late over "Mothers' Day," and the glories of motherhood. That is all very well, so far as it goes, but it would have been better had the opportunity been taken to insist more upon the lapses of American mothers in failing to properly train and care for their daughters.

In the Ladies' Home Journal for March, "The Country Contributor" under the heading, "The Ideas of a Plain Country Woman," discussed the shortcomings of mothers in failing to inform their daughters upon this most vital subject of sex. In the course of her article, she said:

"One fine morning last autumn I was passing a school playground when a boy and girl came bouncing around the corner of the house, running a race. They were handsome young creatures. The girl's figure was developing a little prematurely, and she looked like a woman, though her dress was quite short, exposing a pair of finely-shaped legs. The boy caught her around the body just below the arms, and there, in the sunshine and the beauty of the fresh morning, I witnessed the dawning of physical passion. Now, I say that the girl was being badly treated by her parents and by the laws of the land. She was being given—nay, she was being compelled to take—the opportunity for the development of premature sex passion. She had not much aptitude for books (few girls have,) but she was held there to a smattering of study with nothing really to interest her but the proximity of the boys. I foresaw that she would probably hurry into matrimony and have to bear the stigma of having 'man on the brain,' when in reality the fault was her elders. The fault lies often with elders, who are too dull to devise ways of interesting children in absorbing and fascinating work which will take their minds away from their bodies, in a measure at least, and train their hands to a habit of exercise which will stand them in good stead when the time comes in which they will need to be busy and to like to be busy.

"No doubt this little girl believed that love had come to her. This was because she did not know that the rush of emotion which flooded her being may come to any man and woman who are closely associated day after day. I was 40 years of age before I knew this—and I should have known it when I was 13! In this cruel ignorance we herd our children together, sneering at 'puppy love,' without ever telling them seriously and kindly just what 'puppy love' is, and, worse still, making no effort to shield them from the wild impulses and ungovernable desires that are implanted in the human body for the perpetuity of the race. Can we not teach our girls very simply, and without the hint of coarseness that we all dread, that this strange excitement which thrills us at the touch of a boy's hand, this bashfulness, this blushing, this fluttering of volatile spirits, all these are simply the stirring of certain organs and tissues of the body which are getting in readiness for reproduction? But, better still, why can we not keep girls from experiencing these feelings so early? Surely, at least, we should not deliberately expose them to the opportunity.

"At home, in a hot, disordered kitchen that autumn morning, rushing to get the autumn work done, was a worn, tired mother, straining every nerve to give the pretty child a better education than she herself had had. How much better it would have been for mother and daughter if that girl had been at home, learning to make those pickles and that catsup, ironing the clothes and washing the dishes! That girl was born to be a mother—her physical perfections indicate it, but our system of education was forcing her to put the cart before the horse. She was learning a few unimportant, poorly-understood lessons which she was destined to forget; she was finding a physical outlet she should not have found for at least five years, and she was missing a chance to learn early and easily the practical things which every successful woman must learn.

"I am opposed to the free high school and to the coeducation of boys and girls at the dangerous age of puberty. It is a very grave mistake to suppose that we may 'familiarize' boys and girls and make them forget sex. I am opposed to repression of youthful spirits; but it certainly is greatly in the province of education to direct youthful spirits into healthful channels, and away from the ignorant license which our village young folk of today find at school and on the streets."

European "Nature Cures."

DR. ROBERT D. EMERY and his wife, Dr. Laura B. Emery, of Los Angeles, leave on the first of June for the purpose of pursuing post-graduate studies in the hospitals of London, Vienna and Berlin.

If some of our physicians, when visiting Europe, would inspect the "nature cure" establishments of Germany, Austria and Switzerland, and take note of the methods adopted there, they might acquire some ideas that would be of much benefit to suffering humanity. Germany is, in this direction, far ahead of any other country in the world, although even there they have nothing like the big sanatorium at Battle Creek, Mich.

Swapping Wives.

A COUPLE in Des Moines, Iowa, have just arranged to swaps wives. Not only wives, but houses and furniture. They are not of the lower class, but people of standing in the community.

The swapping was to be perfectly legal. Two divorce decisions were ordered. Then, there was to be a double wedding. The husbands were to move their togs and the wives to remain where they are.

This neat little plan has temporarily miscarried, the judge having held up the divorce papers on account of some technicality. A dispatch tells us that the two women appeared in court at the same time, also, that they "exchanged several quick glances, and then hurriedly left the courtroom, both blushing violently."

Well, it is some satisfaction, at east, to know that they were still able to blush.

These people doubtless look down with contempt and aversion on those who openly practice "free love."

Queer old world, isn't it?

Sacrifices to Surgery.

AT a recent dinner at the California Club, Los Angeles, Dr. Albert A. Vander Veer of Albany, N. Y., speaking on the subject "How Shall We Teach Young Men and Women What They Should Know Before Marriage?" (as quoted in the Southern California Practitioner,) spoke of the enormous amount of work that comes to the surgeon in which many lives, which formerly were sacrificed, are now saved through surgical procedures, many of which necessarily prevent conception by sacrificing the female organs of generation. He also spoke of the great amount of resultant suffering; the women though left alive oftentimes going on to lead lives which are not only unproductive, but in many instances lives of more or less chronic invalidism.

High-Heeled Shoes.

BECAUSE she was wearing high-heeled shoes when she was injured by a fall from a street car, Mrs. Anna Peterson lost her suit for damages against the Oakland Traction Company. Counsel for the company advanced the plea that Mrs. Peterson was guilty of contributory negligence, as no woman wearing high heels could expect to navigate a level street, let alone step hurriedly from a street car, without being overbalanced by such footwear. Superior Judge F. V. Wood held the same view, and gave the company judgment for the costs of the action.

That was a sensible judge. Such accidents as these do not, however, form one-thousandth part of the harm done by these atrocious, hideous, and unwholesome high-heeled shoes. The ill effects range all the way from curvature of the spine to blindness.

With high-heeled shoes, tight corsets, and heavy skirts suspended from the hips, is it any wonder that "female complaints" are the rule rather than the exception?

Victims of Overstudy.

ANOTHER victim of overstudy recently took her life in a suburb of Los Angeles. A girl 21 years of age inhaled gas because she feared she would be unable to keep up with the graduating class of her high school.

This overworking of young brains, especially at a critical age, is nothing short of a crime against nature. And what is the use? A majority of these graduates, a few years after leaving school, are unable to do a simple sum, or write a plain business letter in good English.

Dr. Emil G. Hirsch of Sinai Temple, Chicago—who often says wise things—declares that two hours of study and two hours of manual training is better than six hours of study and recitation. He pleads for a utilitarian education, especially in the grades, where he believes too many cultural subjects are now taught. The curriculum, he says, does not appeal to those who care little for memorizing and does not interest the boy with other than mental faculties.

Right you are, Dr. Hirsch. Also, let as much study as possible be carried on in the open air. This is common in Japan, and we are beginning to learn. The school-garden idea has been remarkably developed in San Antonio, Tex., which is said to have more gardens attached to its schools than any other place of its size in the world. There are 949 of these cultivated plots attached to the twenty-nine schools, the gardens varying from one-tenth to one-quarter of an acre.

Take the Next Car.

TWENTY persons were recently drowned near Pittsburgh by the sinking of a gasoline launch in the Ohio River. They were employés of a factory, who had been working overtime, and were in a hurry to get across, so thirty crowded in where there was only room for half as many. This was another case of "great haste and less speed." Americans are always rushing about like ants, but often with less purpose. They will risk breaking a blood vessel to catch a train or a car that will bring them somewhere ten minutes ahead of another, and then perhaps when they get to their destination, they loaf around and wonder what they shall do with themselves.

"Take the next car" is a good motto to bear in mind.

Crimes Against Criminals.

COL. G. J. GRIFFITH, secretary of the recently-formed Prison Reform League, lectured on "Crimes Against Criminals" before the W.C.T.U. convention at Pomona on May 14. After urging that society, while protecting itself against criminals, should not seek to revenge itself upon them, Col. Griffith went on to say:

"This last policy, the policy of revenge, is the one we pursue today. We take this man and shut him up for years. He is immured some fourteen hours a day in a cell, where often he has barely room to turn. During the remainder of the day he must toil without reward. He is absolutely at the mercy of wardens and guards who have no training or special talent for their offices, which are given them in return for work done in petty party politics. These men understand that they are there to punish the convicts; they are given the power of inflicting torture, and practically they hold in their hands the keys of life and death. They treat the prisoner as the farmer of today never dreams of treating his most worthless cattle.

"Finally, on a date set years before by a judge, who simply guessed at what he thought would be the proper time, this man, whom you have been deliberately brutalizing for years, finds the prison doors opened and he is thrust out into the world again. Physically he is weak from years of confinement. Morally his will power has been undermined completely by long obedience to autocratic orders, he having been forced to live under conditions in which he is not allowed to consult his own judgment. Intellectually, he has lost all grip of affairs, for he has not been allowed to see a newspaper published in the State.

"You thrust such a man into the world again, with $5 in his pocket and a suit of clothes that costs the State $3.85, and that every detective recognizes at a glance. Then you say to such a man: 'Now, be good.'

"My message to you today—the message of the Prison Reform League to the country at large—is that this is to expect an impossibility, and that to expect an impossibility is to make yourselves absurd. It is unworthy of your common sense and of your record as a business nation."

The speaker quoted statistics to show that the cost of crime to the United States is between $5,000,000,000 and $6,000,000,000 a year, and that our social system is going into bankruptcy through its treatment of the crime question, since the expenditure so incurred exceeds the annual increase of wealth. He also shows that the percentage of crime in California is larger than in any State of the Union.

For fifty years, said Col. Griffith, San Quentin has been a school for crime, managed, not by trained men, but by the most brutal methods. The new law providing an appropriation of $8000 for looking after discharged convicts, will do good, if it is honestly administered. He added:

"Paroles are still hedged round with restrictions that render them accessible only to the man of some money, and the old absurdity of the length of sentence being determined by the guess of the judge is still the rule.

"The indeterminate sentence plan, of which I am a persistent advocate, would leave the question of the prisoner's restoration to liberty to be decided by a board that would have spread out before it the full record of the man's conduct during his confinement, thus enabling it to decide, with some chance of the decision being correct, whether or not the time had arrived when the convict might be trusted to mingle again in society.

"Such a system, advocated as it is by leading prison scientists, would make each prisoner the arbiter of his own future, would inspire him with hope and hold out to him inducement to reform. Unfortunately, it has not yet found favor with the California legislators, and, although my bill for making San Quentin a reformatory passed the last Assembly, it was smothered in the Senate.

"By way of contrast, I call attention to the fact that the board of managers of the New York reformatory at Elmira reports that there has not been a case of flogging there for nearly nine years, and that for the past five years there has been no form whatever of corporal punishment in use. The material with which the Elmira reformatory has to deal represents the toughest element from the slums of New York."

Col. Griffith referred to the suggestion made by some that it was a mistake to include total abolition of capital punishment among the objects of the Prison Reform League. Against this he advanced the plea that the principle of revenge is wrong. The editor of the Care of the Body still believes that it was a tactical mistake to include this feature, as it will prevent the organization from receiving the assistance of many who would otherwise give it support, for there are many thousands of good people in this and in other countries, who, like the editor of the Care of the Body, while most heartily in sympathy with prison reform, doubt the desirability or practicability of entirely abolishing capital punishment when, for instance, deliberate, cold-blooded crimes are committed by degenerates. In such cases, it is better for society, and for the criminal himself, that he should quickly, quietly, and painlessly be removed from this mortal sphere, not in a revengeful way, but just as we would cut down a worthless tree that incumbers the ground. First, however, we should be quite sure that he is really worthless, and is not amenable to rational methods of treatment, of which diet, air, exercise, and hydropathy are important features.

In concluding, Col. Griffith referred to the sexual degeneration which is always rampant in our penitentiaries. In this way, he declares, many boys are ruined for life—ruined not only morally, but physically. A most disgraceful fact, this. When the 1600 cells now being built at San Quentin and Folsom are completed, there will be some improvement in this direction. Col. Griffith added:

"Every effort is put forth by the authorities to conceal these conditions, and I notice that recently an official report by Miss Kate Barnard, State Commissioner of Charities and Corrections in Oklahoma, on conditions in the prisons of that State, was barred from the mails as being obscene."

Misleading Statements About Alcohol.

IT seems almost impossible for either the opponents or the defenders of alcohol to tell the plain truth without exaggerating. Almost as impossible as it was for the Northerners and Southerners to discuss calmly the subject of slavery in the days preceding the war.

Referring to comments on articles by Hugo Munsterberg, director of the physiological laboratory at Harvard University, and by Henry Smith Williams, M.D., LL.D., appearing recently in McClure's Magazine, Dr. Charles Loomis Dana of New York City, the well-known nervous-disease specialist, has been moved to write to the New York Times in protest against the "dogmatism so frequently put forth with regard to alcohol and its use." The common sense of humanity, he says, revolts at the attempt to settle the alcohol question by the formulae of "always a poison," "always a narcotic," "always a tissue hardener." He states his positive belief that there are no physicians of long experience who have not known old men with normal, soft arteries who have drunk moderately all their lives have been well and begot healthy children.

At the City Club in Los Angeles an address was recently delivered by Capt. D. M. Smith, general counsel of the Modern License League. In the course of his address he said:

"If the use of alcohol is contrary to the laws of nature, why is it that every flower, every plant, every fruit and every species of grain contain to some degree at least alcohol? We are accustomed to think of nature as all wise, and to believe that her laws are for the betterment of mankind; that there is nothing in nature that has not its use, and that its every provision is for the welfare of man."

This is an unfounded assertion. Fruits and grain develop a little alcohol after they begin to decay, but not in their normal condition.

Again, a Chicago news item recently stated that Chicago bread of the 5-cent loaf variety had been found to contain from three to four-tenths of 1 per cent. of alcohol. It is true that fermented bread when quite fresh develops a little alcohol, but it evaporates. That is one reason why it is better to eat stale bread.

Yet again, in a recently published book on health by a physician, the statement is made that a "five-pound loaf of bread contains more food than twenty-seven barrels of beer."

This is a gross exaggeration. It is true that alcohol is not a food, Prof. Atwater to the contrary, notwithstanding. There is no nourishment in a gallon of whisky. In beer, however, there is a small percentage of nourishment remaining after the spoiling of the barley. It is true that it is a poor kind of nourishment. It would have been nearer the mark for this writer to have said that a five-pound loaf of white fermented bread contains as much nourishment as a barrel of beer. That is a wide enough margin, isn't it?

Such exaggerations as these do harm, because they lead those who have not studied the question of food values to disbelieve other statements that are true.

Health and Beauty.

"THE most beautiful girl" has once more been discovered. This time it is a young San Francisco woman, who is to be queen of the forthcoming Portola festival in that city.

How do the judges know that this is the "most beautiful girl in California?" Did they carefully examine all the California girls between the ages of—oh, well, say 15 and 50? Not at all. They inspected 2000 photographs that were sent to them. There are nearly two million people in the State, of which a considerable percentage are girls. Then, again, photographs, like figures, have been known to lie—or at least to flatter. Judging from a published picture we have scores of prettier girls in Los Angeles. You can't, however, as a rule, go much on newspaper portraits. And then, beauty is much a matter of taste.

This indiscriminate use of the superlative, in season and out of season, is silly and misleading. It should be left to the country "gernalist." Why not be content to say "one of the most beautiful girls in California?"

Of one thing be sure. There is no real beauty without health. On the other hand, no woman who glows with health can be really ugly. Cosmetics may temporarily cover up blemishes, but they will soon result in a permanently disfigured skin. The saying "Beauty is only skin deep," is absolutely false.

Nature's cosmetics are fresh air, soft water, inward and outward exercise, kindly thoughts, and a temperate diet of clean, wholesome food. This will result in the proper functioning of the body-cleaning organs, resulting in a healthy skin and bright eyes. There is no other way. Believe this.

No woman can for any length of time retain beauty who feeds—or overfeeds—regularly on rich meats, and sauces, and gravies, and pies, and cakes, or who carries about within her a colon filled with filth.

The French say: "If faut souffrir pour etre beau"—"You must suffer to be beautiful." Yes, you must suffer if you wish to be artificially beautiful, but to be naturally beautiful, you have only to obey Nature's laws.

The Parisian Plan.

A SAYING popular among British "kickers" half a century ago—the kind of people who, whenever anything went wrong, would "write to the Times"—was: "They do these things better in France." Well, some things at least we may learn from our impulsive Gallic friends.

As, for instance: James Hazen Hyde, formerly of New York, now of Paris, Francomaniac and millionaire, has been sentenced in the French capital to a month's imprisonment and a fine of $100 for running into a taxicab with an automobile and injuring a passenger. The chauffeur got $30 and thirty days. Hyde added to his offense by running away. Under a recent French law, flight after an accident is a special offense.

In the United States the punishment for a similar act would probably have been half the fine and no jail. Whereupon the wealthy culprit would have smiled and paid cheerfully. Indeed, many of these wealthy speedomaniacs really seem to regard the running down of pedestrians as a new form of stylish sport. It's about time they were given a few salutary lessons, in the shape of jail sentences, without the option of a fine.

What's the use of caring for the body, if you are likely to have that body knocked into a pulpy mass by any reckless automobilist, who has raised half a jag?

Perhaps, after this, Hyde won't be quite such a warm admirer of "that dear Paree."

Artificial Food Prices.

MR. WILSON, the Secretary of Agriculture, recently said that the present price of wheat is a purely artificial one, is due to manipulation, and that cash wheat was 40 cents too high on the 10th of May.

If this is true in regard to what is usually considered a necessary article of food, then a government which is supposed (at least theoretically) to care for the interests of its people should at once take steps to prevent the cornering of food products.

Meantime, remember that when prices of any particular food are forced up to an abnormal height, the remedy lies with the people themselves. If, for instance, when beef, or bacon, or wheat, or any other article of food is unreasonably high in price, the people of the United States would cease consuming it for a couple of months—or at least cut down the consumption by one-half—they would soon bring the price down to a reasonable point.

There are a number of substitutes that you can use in place of wheat. As for instance, corn, or rye, or oats, or potatoes, or peas or beans, or dried fruit. Americans eat altogether too much cereal food. As previously stated here, starch poisoning is responsible for a vastly greater number of ailments than meat poisoning. Americans would greatly benefit in health if they would eat only one-third as much of cereals and three times as

A PAINTED SIGN

At 711 S. Main Street is attracting much attention. It contains the following words from The Times Magazine, February 16, 1908.

"Give the Chinaman a Chance"

"It was recently mentioned in The Times that Dr. Tom She Bin, one of the best known Chinese physicians in the United States, had been charged with practicing without a license. The doctor is a graduate of one of the leading colleges of medicine in China. He came to this country many years ago. En route plague broke out on the ship. The vessel's physician was unable to cope with it, but it is said that Dr. Tom saved every case. He was retained by the steamship company and served on Oriental lines for several years. He then began to practice among his countrymen in San Francisco, but after the earthquake came to Los Angeles. In view of the fact that a majority of plague cases in San Francisco have proved fatal under the care of white physicians, it might not be a bad idea to get Dr. Bin to go up there and see what he can do."

Dr. Tom She Bin can be seen at the Chinese Tea and Herb Sanitarium, 711 S. Main St. Established 1870.

Death of Dr. Pitzer.

DR. GEORGE C. PITZER died suddenly in Los Angeles, and was buried on May 14. Dr. Pitzer's face is familiar to readers of hygienic magazines throughout the United States, as he was a wide advertiser in such publications. He was a teacher of suggestive therapeutics, and had a large practice, principally by mail. He was a worthy man, of somewhat frail physique, the mental temperament being altogether predominant in him. Until within the past few years he had been inclined to ignore the important subject of diet, but of late—perhaps partly owing to suggestions from the editor of the Care of the Body—he had given that subject some recognition.

Dr. Pitzer was born in 1835, in Ohio. In St. Louis, he conducted the St. Louis School of Suggestive Therapeutics and Medical Electricity, later going to Denver, and coming to Los Angeles (for the second time) in 1906. For a number of years he was editor of the American Medical Journal, and wrote several books on medical electricity and suggestive therapeutics. His latest book, entitled "Suggestion," was reviewed in the Care of the Body about two years ago.

Dr. Pitzer leaves a widow, who will carry on his practice with his son, who is a physician in Texas.

Protection from Poison Ivy.

THE time has arrived when, in Southern California, those who love nature begin to plan trips to the mountains. Also the time has arrived when those who are unfortunately subject to infection in this way are inquiring about preventives against ivy poisoning. Once more, therefore, it may be well to publish this absolutely sure preventive, which has been given here several times.

One level teaspoonful of concentrated lye in a quart of boiling water. After it cools, bottle for use. Before you go where you expect to encounter poison ivy, rub all exposed portions of the skin with the water. Do the same after you return.

This is a preventive. As for a cure, after you are infected, about the only thing you can do is to "grin and bear it." To alleviate the burning sensation, wash the parts with water containing borax.

The Milk in the Cocoanut.

THE CALIFORNIA STATE JOURNAL OF MEDICINE recently chided physicians who handle a healing oil sold by agents of a company that manufactures it. The chief objection to this product on part of the editor of the Journal appears to be, not that it is injurious, for he does not say anything to that effect, but that the public may easily learn to use it from the circular inclosed in each package, and so be able to dispense with the services of a physician. This is the milk in the cocoanut. The article concludes as follows:

"He knows just what 'pinoleum' is good for (and that is almost everything above the neck,) and he goes happily upon his way prescribing for all his friends who will listen to him. We are waiting with interest for the appearance of the progressive manufacturer who will dispense in the package with a bottle of castor oil, a Complete Treatise on Home Medication, or Every One His Own Physician."

Well, omitting the castor oil, that would not be such a bad idea. Apart from the praise of their "dope," some of the patent-medicine circulars and advertisements contain more common sense remarks in regard to general hygiene than a patient is ever likely to receive from the average physician.

However, so long as the rotten and irrational system prevails of paying the doctors only when you are sick, it is not likely that we shall find any of them tumbling over each other to teach people how to keep well.

A Surgical Suggestion.

THREE doctors were operating on a man for appendicitis. After the operation was completed one of the doctors missed a small sponge. The patient was reopened, the sponge found within, and the man sewed up again. Immediately the second doctor missed a needle. Again the patient was opened and closed. Then the third doctor missed a pair of scissors. "Gentlemen," said the victim as they were about to open him up again, "for heaven's sake, if you're going to keep this up, put buttons on me."—[Success.

Cuts and Wounds.

FOLLOWING is from "Life and Health:"

"In case of a cut or wound, the part should be placed in very hot water, or the hot water may be poured over the wound. If this is not practical, a clean cloth may be wrung out of very hot water and applied to the wound, being changed at short intervals. Very hot water stops the bleeding, and keeps the wound clean, preventing blood poisoning, which is always the result of germs getting into the fresh wound. If this plan were always followed in case of a small cut, or even a scratch on the hands or fingers, many painful sores might be avoided."

FACT AND COMMENT.

A READER of Fact and Comment who appears to have a good deal of confidence in what The Times can accomplish through this department, and who is evidently interested in South Main street property, suggests that from Eleventh street southward the name of Main street be changed to Broadway as far as Moneta avenue, and that from the junction of Moneta avenue and Main street southward Moneta avenue be known as Broadway. In the first place, that is a matter of interest particularly to the property holders on Main south of Eleventh, and on Moneta avenue from its junction with Main street to the city limits. It is a matter which does not particularly interest property holders elsewhere, and all The Times can do through the real estate department or otherwise is simply to lay the matter before these property holders.

Are the Reasons Good?

The writer of the communication assigns as reasons for such a change that it would be a consistent extension of Broadway; that it would give to this street a character somewhat like Broadway in New York City; that it would raise the values of real estate on Main and Moneta to the Broadway basis, and lastly, that it would answer all the purposes of the avenue. These reasons are given for the same purpose as reference is made to it at all—to call the attention of property holders along the line of proposed change to the matter in detail. They may or may not see this matter in the light of the communication which has called forth these remarks. The editor of Fact and Comment is a little blind upon this point. It is a little obscure to his vision why the proposed change of names should particularly affect values. As a matter of fact, southward from the junction of Main street and Moneta avenue the influence of the name "Main" does not seem to have any effect whatever upon values. Moneta avenue, standing upon its own base, seems to carry a higher value than Main street. Therefore Fact and Comment has suggested swapping the names Main street and Moneta avenue, not with the idea of influencing values, but for the geographical reason that Moneta avenue is Main street, or should be, being a straight extension of this street.

The New County Highways.

The importance of this great artery running north and south is evidenced by the initial operations of the County Highway Commission. The first stretch of the new county roads to be built is that eastward from near the eastern end of Main street. If that thoroughfare is ever put into the condition of traffic that it should be, the population living east of the city all through the Gabriel Valley away to the river will come into the city by Main street. The second piece of the good roads to be undertaken will stretch from the new harbor at San Pedro and Wilmington across Negro Slough and will likely reach the city about the end of the street on Moneta avenue. All the traffic coming to Los Angeles from the harbor cities will strike this big north and south thoroughfare, too. It will not matter whether the street is to be called Main street or Moneta avenue. The values of property fronting on the street will depend upon where the road to the harbor strikes.

The Future of Main Street.

Taking Main street as a whole, the editor of Fact and Comment has been for many years of the unwavering opinion that it must be in the future a very important thoroughfare in Los Angeles. This opinion is based upon other reasoning than the name, although there is something in that, too. In a way it really is the main street of the city of Los Angeles. It reaches from the extreme northeastern limits of the city over by Eastlake Park in almost a continuous straight line to the intersection of Moneta avenue. If the change proposed by Fact and Comment were carried out, then Main street would extend from end to end of the city. In a way this great artery divides Los Angeles into two pretty equal halves. It runs close along the edge of what is and will continue to be the great industrial section of the city. A dense population will always be found between Main street and the river. All the population of Los Angeles on both sides of the river up to Main must continue forever to cross that thoroughfare to get into the principal retail section of the city. Whatever the street shall be named in the whole or in part, these influences must forever make it an important artery and create high values for property fronting upon it.

Shifting of Values.

Those who are interested in real estate and its values must be continually on the alert to keep track of changes likely to affect values in particular sections of the city such as this influence of the new roads being built by the county, the consolidation of the city and the county, and the development of the new harbor with the incident of municipal wharves upon it. The city of Los Angeles is growing so rapidly and the country around is being developed to such a wonderful extent that influences are continually arising tending to change values at different points. The encouraging part of it is that in the main the tendency is to raise values everywhere. All the influences are in a general way favorable. There is very little that takes place with us which has a depressing influence upon property values in any part of the city. But of course the desire of operators is to reap the benefit of the greatest rises in value. Wherever one of the new county highways enters the city the influence on property values there will be prompt and great. Sometime in the not very distant future there will be a great union passenger depot built here for all the railroads entering the city. This will have a considerable effect upon real estate near thereto. Another matter agitated right at the moment is an enlargement of the city market. There are conflicting interests working to place this important convenience at one point or at another. It will be worth watching closely, for wherever it finally goes the effect upon property values there will be considerable. Sometime ago this department suggested that the entrance of the Los Angeles-Pacific beach cars through the twin tunnels between First and Sunset boulevard along Hill street would exert an influence upon Hill street south of First in a business way. The tunnels are not yet opened, nor will the cars be running for six weeks to come, but already deals are being made on Hill street based upon the expectations of what this change in the beach cars will do for Hill street.

ADD TO MARKET SITE.

Purchase Yesterday of Two Lots for Sixty Thousand Dollars Makes Project Sure.

With the exception of a lot 90x150 feet in size, all the area inclosed by Ninth, Eleventh, San Pedro and San Julian streets, has been secured through lease and purchase by the City Market Company, of which Frank Simpson is president, as a site for its new market. This condition of affairs was brought about yesterday through the purchase by Mr Simpson from the Title Insurance and Trust Company of two lots in the market site section. The transaction was accomplished through the agency of R. A. Rowan & Co., and the consideration was $60,000.

One of the lots is at the northwest corner of San Pedro and Eleventh streets, facing 142 feet on San Pedro by 135 feet deep to an alley. The other property is at the northeast corner of Eleventh and San Julian, fronting 150 feet on Eleventh and 75 feet on San Julian. To the north of the former piece lies the large Huntington tract, extending to Eleventh, between San Julian and San Pedro streets, which was recently leased through R. A. Rowan & Co., by the market promoters, and the paving of which has already begun.

The lot which still lies out of the complete control of the promoters of the market is the site of the stables of the H. Jevne Company. The building is large and substantial, and it is said that Mr. Jevne will soon convert it into a business house. Otherwise it is reported that the market will be built around the property. A hundred men are at work on the paving of the great floor space, and it is thought that the market itself will be in operation by August 1.

BUY LARGE TRACT.

Realty Firm Acquires Forty-four Acres on Normandie Avenue and Will Subdivide It.

Leo J. Maguire and Company, as agents, sold on Wednesday to the McCarthy Company a forty-five-acre tract on the west side of Normandie avenue, between Fiftieth and Fifty-fourth streets, for a consideration reported at $100,000. Tracy Schoultz represented the purchasers. The sellers were J. H. Strine, Lester L. Robinson and R. P. C. Smith of Los Angeles, and the Crookshank Bros., and John Cubbon of Santa Ana.

The McCarthy Company will at once expend $25,000 in improvements. Cement sidewalks and curbs will be laid, and grading and oiling of the roads begun. The company also contemplates building fifty bungalows to cost $1500 to $2500 each. The property will be subdivided immediately into 250 large lots, and arrangements are progressing for the reservation of a business era.

BELIEVES IN SPRING STREET.

CAPITALIST INVESTS OVER HALF MILLION IN WEEK.

Retired Railroad Man Buys on Popular Business Highway at Aggregate Consideration of Five Hundred and Forty Thousand Dollars. Plans Great Improvements.

When William Garland on Friday added the Hotel Afton property at Nos. 531-535 South Spring street to his large realty holdings in this city he brought his total purchases of Spring-street property for the week up to a valuation of $540,000. The property was bought through the agency of R. A. Rowan & Company from a group of owners represented by Maurice S. Hellman, J. A. Graves and Judge Charles Monroe, as trustees, the consideration being $240,000. The building, which is on a lot 60x165 feet, is a brick structure of three stories. The Hotel Afton Company occupies sixty-two rooms on the second and third floors. The ground floor is occupied by the branch office of The Times, and by the Truitt Millinery Company.

The Hotel Delaware, which was purchased on November, 1906, through the agency of R. A. Rowan & Company at a consideration of $235,000, and which fronts on Broadway, joins the acquisition of Friday at the rear. The present possession of the buyer, therefore, extends through the block from Spring to Broadway.

Mr. Garland's second largest deal for the week was the buying of the business property at Nos. 326-328 South Spring street of Willard H. Stimson, through Lee A. McConnell for $150,000. The improvements at this location consist of a three-story building with a frontage of forty-two feet and a depth of 136 feet to an alley. The present tenants of the first floor are the Charles A. Watts Clothing Company and the Jim Jeffries saloon. The buyer plans to erect a large office building on the site at the expiration of the leases of these two businesses four years hence.

On Thursday Mr. Garland purchased through the agency of Bryan & Bradford the property at Nos. 621-623 South Spring street, paying $146,000. The sale was made for the Fred A. Salisbury estate, represented in this instance by Mrs. Jennie Hobert of Pasadena. The size of the lot is 50x160 feet, and the improvements consist of a single-story building occupied by a small store and a café. At the expiration of the leases for these rooms about ten months from now Mr. Garland has announced his intention of erecting a substantial building in keeping with the character of its neighborhood.

Mr. Garland is a retired railroad magnate, and reputed many times a millionaire. He at one time owned the entire Gila Valley Railroad system, and he is known to have made a fortune by transferring this possession to the Southern Pacific. His realty transactions in this city in the past five years have included the buying and selling of many of the most valuable properties in Los Angeles.

TRANSFORMING A FINE AVENUE.

TWELVE BEAUTIFUL HOMES SPRING UP IN YEAR.

Great Western Edge of City Developing Beyond Dreams of Original Acreage Holders—Section About Country Club Improved With High-Class Residences.

Few streets in the city can boast of the rapid development witnessed on Highland avenue in the Country Club Terrace section during the past twelve months. The first house in the tract was erected near Pico street a year ago. Twelve others have sprung up since, the plans have been drawn for many more. Country Club Terrace east of Westchester Place gives evidence of almost equally marvelous growth, at least twenty-five dwellings having been built there in the past two years.

The Country Club Terrace section was developed by Robert Marsh & Company about four years ago, at which time 125 lots were laid out. The project was left in a quiescent state until a year ago, at which time the actual advertising of the tract began. The acreage originally belonged to J. W. Weggerer, who transferred it to its present owners. It adjoins the grounds of the Los Angeles Country Club on the west. This western section was in older days known as the Pico Heights district.

The houses pictured on this page are among those most recently built in the two tracts. The home just completed for J. E. Marsh on Highland avenue, is a ten-room frame building with two stories and an attic. It is finished in hardwood throughout, and cost in the neighborhood of $10,600. The dwelling of T. E. Nelson is of nine rooms, and cost about $8000.

The residence of Dr. William Duffield, which has been completed at the corner of St. Andrews Place and Pico street in Country Club Park, embodies unique architectural features. It contains ten large rooms and three bath rooms, and is of brick on the first story, and of heavy rustic timbers above. The living rooms and upper halls are finished in birch and white cedar. Heavily beamed ceilings are features of the living room, hall and dining-room. F. J. Soper was the supervising architect.

Among the new dwellings recently completed on Highland avenue are a $6500 home for H. M. Cowper, a $7000 residence for E. J. Peabody, an $8500 house for J. A. Mize, a $6000 home for Fred R. Dorn, an $8000 dwelling for Peter Noland and a home for O. L. Galbraith costing $7500.

RENTS TO AUTO DEALERS.

Frederick D. Witte has leased to the Nash and Fenimore Automobile Company, through the agency of Mines & Farish, the store property at the southeast corner of Tenth and Olive streets. The contracts call for a term of five years, the rental to be at the rate of $225 a month for the first two years, and $250 a month thereafter.

NEW APARTMENT-HOUSES.

Three-Story Frame Building at Tenth and Arapahoe and Four-Story Brick on Fremont.

Contracts have been let for the construction of two new apartment-houses, plans for which were recently drawn by C. C. Rittenhouse. One of these, which is to be started next week, will be at the corner of Tenth and Arapahoe streets. This structure is to be of frame construction and to contain twenty-four rooms. It will be three stories in height with a basement, and a three-story porch will occupy the frontage. Many modern conveniences are to be installed, including a patented garbage conveyor, which is the invention of the architect. The building, which is on a lot 50x150 feet, is to cost in the neighborhood of $20,000, and is being erected for George I. Tedford.

The second apartment-house is to be built for J. S. Hixon at No. 557 Fremont street on a lot 60x150 feet. The dimensions of the building, which is to be a four-story brick, will be 48x76 feet. The construction work probably will begin some time in June, and the cost is expected to be about $20,000. The property will contain twenty apartments, divided into two and three-room suites, and is built to be leased.

FOR SALE—LOTS.

HAVE YOU A LOT YOU WANT TO SELL? Why not build on it and sell the house and lot, incidentally getting an advance of several hundred dollars above what your lot is worth.
That is what we can do for you. Our plan is absolutely unassailable and is a straight-out business proposition. We will furnish the money to build with and secure the value of your lot by deed of trust and pay you in cash the value of your lot; half when sold and half in the first payment on the trust deed, with interest.
If your lot is encumbered, see us anyway. We will see what can be done.
IF YOU WANT TO BUILD ON YOUR LOT FOR A HOME, SO MUCH THE BETTER.
It will cost you nothing to talk with us and we may be able to do for you what would at first thought seem almost too much to ask.
We want your business.

INCOME
GUARANTEED
FOR 10 YEARS.

This lot is 50x130—directly across street from the big Hamburger store—and immediately adjoining Broadway corner, which is now being cleared and will be substantially improved by the Merritt interests.
This lot is right in the center of present commercial activity and where values are increasing as they are nowhere else in the city. It is only a question of a few years until this property will ,undoubtedly, double in value.
To the man who will buy this property now and will put $100,000 improvements on it—the Robert Marsh Company are in a position to place the property under a lease that will pay the investor 7 per cent. on his entire investment for ten years.
The property is at present improved with a two story frame apartment building.
This is an exceptional opportunity for any man who has sufficient idle capital to swing it.

The lot is 100x139 and is at the northeast corner of Eighth and Broadway; where shrewd investors have already picked up nearly everything available. This is the only corner on Broadway between Fourth and Ninth that is for sale today—and we have it at such a remarkably low figure that it will show within the next 18 months a profit of at least $100,000. FOR SALE—
ASSURED INCOME FOR INVESTORS.
HIGH-CLASS OLIVE GROVE.
100 ACRES. $20,000.

THE PRICE OF OLIVES IS RISING BECAUSE CONSUMPTION OUTSTRIPS PRODUCTION.

This grove contains about 7000 trees; about 5000 trees 10 years old, the balance three to five years, planted 25 feet apart. Location, near Etiwanda, on Santa Fe, 45 miles from Los Angeles.
The hard pioneer work of starting and cultivating to bearing point is ALL done.
Cost of production is low because soil is sub-irrigated; the trees are in the pink of condition, and there is no scale in this district.
Hence irrigating and fumigating expenses are cut out.
The cost of caring for, this year, will be about $350 for the 100 acres.
We have personally inspected every acre of the grove, and we know it is A1.
Your market is assured under contract with American Olive Co. In 1908 this olive ranch paid 7 per cent. on present value of $20,000. This year all indications point to a crop paying about 20 per cent.
REMEMBER olives bear heavier and larger fruit indefinitely for decades, and your income is large and well assured.
Price $20,000. 1-3 cash. Balance 6 per cent.

ROBERT MARSH & CO.,
140 W. 5th St. Both phones.

FOR SALE—
LEASED AT $2280 PER YEAR.
PRICE $26,000.
Close-in corner, new building, stores on first floor, unique apartments above.
Recently three properties in this vicinity have been purchased by shrewd local investors, aggregating $120,000.
These purchases were largely the result of the Hill st. tunnel, now nearing completion; this enterprise will also enhance the value of the property here offered. Further, important building improvements are being arranged for, which will also influence its value; under such conditions 12 per cent. should prove an excellent investment.

Valley and Foothill Lands.

773 ACRES.

Say, reader, if you are thinking of making an investment for speculation or for an income, we would like to have had you with us on our trip the past week, for we saw one of the best propositions it has been our good fortune to see for many years. It was a property up in the Tule River Valley, above Porterville district. There is 773 acres in the tract, about 140 acres mostly level land, balance up in the foothills and such hills, rather steep, but mostly smooth-covered with grass and many, many large beautiful oak trees. In fact, they estimate 5000 cords of oakwood and then besides the beauty of the scene, these oaks are good for shade for the stock and they produce tons of acorns, which is fine food for hogs, and they do say that the stock and hog industry pays well in that country. This land, they say will carry 100 head of cows and 200 head of hogs the year round. Then there is a small running stream on the place the year round; also a large ditch running through the property which carries 500 miners' inches of water and this property has 1-6 interest in this ditch and water.

There are 25 acres of land irrigated from this ditch and the most of the balance of the 123 acres can be irrigated from the water in this ditch by lifting from 10 to 50 feet.

At the present time there is 9 acres of oranges, 2 acres peaches and apples and 7 acres of alfalfa, and a hundred acres more can be set out. There is a good 6-room house, good large barn and other outbuildings. The property is all fenced and cross-fenced, and say, you should see the view from this place. You look north across the valley, about 1½ miles, and you see a good school-house on the hill and the school mam, by the way, is a former L. A. county girl from Pomona. Just beyond is the winding Tule River, too high at the present time to ford; then a string of orange orchards and beyond the foothills then the snow-covered mountains, and, say, that climate; well, now talk about your California ozone, that's where you get it right direct from the fountian head. No dust or microbes in that pure mountain air.

Say, come on, let's go up; what do you say? We can take the 11:30 train Sunday evening, get to Porterville at 9 o'clock Tuesday morning and then have a beautiful buggy ride up the valley through some as fine orange orchards as you ever saw.

All right, I will have reserved for you lower berth car No. 2, and, by the way, if you want to buy this fine property for your very own, you can do it for a very small amount of coin of the realm. Just call us up by phone Monday morning and I will make all arrangements before the other fellow comes around.

Yours, till Monday.

R. S. BASSETT,
302½ S. Broadway.

[From Riverside Press.]
RIVERSIDE-RIALTO RAILROAD.

Proceedings About Finished for a Line That May Be Running by June 15.

The Press is able to make an announcement of importance today with regard to the progress being made in securing rights of way for the Riverside-Rialto road, says the Riverside Press. When asked regarding the matter today, Mayor Evans stated that options or promises had been secured on all but one piece through to Rialto, which is destined to become as important a suburb as Arlington, and which is precisely the same distance from the city, or will be by way of the new road. The Mayor is proceeding as fast as possible with the work of getting these promises into writing, and expects before the week is over to have everything in ship shape.

The cost to the city for the rights of way, the most of which have been donated, will not exceed $10000, and this amount includes the cost of the removal of the street-car tracks on North Main street this side of the proposed subway. 22

BUSINESS CHANCES— For Sale.

EXCELLENT OPPORTUNITY.
A chance is now open for THREE responsible shares in a close syndicate who are making money every day by every family in the United States.
We pay no attention to this unless you have the ready cash to invest in an economic development of a staple that is used daily by all the people. We can earn dividends. Some of them will begin almost at once.
Remember, each $500 invested in the Dell Telephone stock at the start has paid the investor over $30,000 in cash dividends, and dividends still going on.
Also remember, each $500 invested originally in shares of the Mergenthaler Linotype Company has paid over $127,000 in dividends.
I could call your attention to the history of original investments in the "Western Union Telegraph Company," "The Dunbar Co.," "The Singer Sewing Machine Co.," "The American Locomotive Co." the "Johnston Typewriter Co." "The International Harvester Co." and many other organizations based upon and protected by letters patent from the U. S. Government of PLANS that at once become universally used.
I only say that NOW we have ready for manufacture a staple that brings immediate returns of immense profits equal to the best referred to hereinabove. Perhaps if you have idle money you owe it to yourself to investigate.
There are only TEN units in the present offering, each $5,000.00. SEVEN of these shares have already been spoken for by men of prominence and wealth in Southern California and credited with excellent business judgment. We have THREE "units" yet to offer. Do you want one of them?
It is the intention of this announcement is to sufficiently interest you to have you investigate, of course, that you have satisfied that you can conveniently invest in this OPPORTUNITY appeals to your business judgment when you have been fully advised.
Your interview in every way confidential.

OPTIMISTIC.

JUBILANT OVER NEW RAILROAD.

Men Who Stuck Through Hard Times, Happy.

Outside Capital Continues to Pour Into San Diego.

Activity in Country Towns Is Increasing Apace.

SAN DIEGO, May 21.—With a volume of business aggregating $200,000 of outside capital seeking investments here, with the big insurance companies placing loans on income-producing property, and with the signing of contracts for the first fourteen miles of grading of the San Diego and Arizona Railroad, there is extreme joy on the part of those dealers in real estate who have pinned their faith in the future of San Diego by remaining at the post when all was dark and dreary and when investments were slow.

Perhaps the building of the new railroad has much to do with the influx of capital seeking investments. Contracts for the grading were signed Thursday by John D. Spreckels, representing the railroad company, and Robert Sherer of Los Angeles. The latter states that his grading outfit will be on the ground by the middle of this week, and that there will be work for all able-bodied men. His contract is for grading alone, exclusive of bridges.

Col. Ed Fletcher, local manager of the Keller-Kerckhoff interests, announces a loan of $150,000 on the properties of the South Coast Land Company at Del Mar and Oceanside, the funds going advanced by the Security Savings Bank of Los Angeles. The money, it is understood, will be used in further improving the railroad properties of that company between this city and Del Mar. This is to be the connecting link of the Huntington lines in their extension from Los Angeles to San Diego.

The Pacific Mutual Insurance Company is said to be placing loans here in large amounts. One is a $60,000 investment. This is said to have been placed on the properties of a local capital association.

Another stir in building circles is caused by the announcement that the public will be afforded an opportunity of contributing to the completion of the U. S. Grant Hotel building. U. S. Grant, Jr., having failed to interest outside capital, has turned the property over to a board of trustees, to be selected by the local banks, each of which has agreed to underwrite bond issues to a total amount of $600,000, the securities to be placed on the local market. It is believed that San Diego people will subscribe liberally to the project, and that enough money will soon be in sight to commence operations on completing the huge building. L. J. Wilde, president of the American National Bank, has the project in charge.

Several important sales were closed during the week. T. D. Johnson bought 100x100 feet at the southwest corner of Union and C streets from Miss Gillmore for $20,000. John F. Jameson bought of Kate G. Barstow 60 feet at the southwest corner of Fourth and H streets for $15,000.

The largest single deal was the purchase by a local investor, through M. H. of George M. Hawley's property, 50 feet on the east side of Third street, between B and C, with a depth of 150 feet, for $22,500.

Choice residence properties and sites continue in demand. Margaret Novotny bought of Charles F. Barnes 100x150 feet at Second and Juniper streets for $10,000. The lots are unimproved and are desirable for fine homes.

A. E. Bemis, a wealthy manufacturer of St. Louis, has decided to locate in Southern California. He has purchased the Houts cottage at the corner of Bella and A avenues, Coronado.

BEAUTIFUL HOME SOLD.

BUY LOTS TO BUILD UPON.

SOUTH PASADENA, May 22.—Gillett & Co. report the following sales for the past week: Mrs. Elizabeth Schaffer to Mrs. Bertha Bischoff, mother of the artist Franz Bischoff, four lots, each 50x165 feet on the north side of Sterling Place, between Orange Grove and Palm avenues, for a consideration of $2000. Mrs. Bischoff will build a fine residence on these lots, and make this place her future home. G. H. Stone has purchased of the George W. Stimson Company, a nine-room residence on Columbia street, west of the Raymond Hotel in Oak Lawn tract, for a consideration of $12,000. This is one of the fine places of that tract and Mr. Stone will occupy his property as a residence.

John E. Boyles of Los Angeles will build two bungalows costing about $4000 each, on the two lots he recently bought on Glendon Way, between El Centro street and Monterey Road, through the agency of Washburn & Co. Seventeen very large and old eucalyptus trees are to be removed before these lots before building can be started.

TO "LINER" ADVERTISERS:
Dating from June 1, classified advertising in The Times will be charged by the word at the present established rate of 1c per word in the daily issue and 1½c Sunday.

Close calculations, covering a period of several months, develop the fact that the average number of words to the line are a fraction over seven. This basis for charge, therefore, will prevail after June 1.

Cash want advertising has always been calculated by the word, and this regulation will not change the manner of handling it.

The present "want" ad. rate has been in effect for many years, though the circulation of the paper, now more than 50,000 daily and 80,000 Sundays, has trebled during this period. No paper in the United States, rate considered, compares with The Times in "want" ad. service.

HOMESEEKERS' PRIZES.

Developing Water Supply for Fertile Soil—Thousands of Acres Tributary to Delano—Colony Lands the Basis of a Fortune.

BY E. C. PENTLAND.

I STOOD waiting in the line near the railroad ticket window at the depot in Los Angeles I heard a gentleman just ahead of me say: "I want to buy two tickets for Delano." I became interested at once, since Delano was also my destination, and I was aware of the fact, which is not generally known, that three persons buying round-trip tickets at one time, on the same train, for the same destination in the San Joaquin Valley, can get a reduction in price; so, as soon as I could, I introduced myself, and we bought our tickets together and became fellow travelers. The gentleman introduced me to his wife, standing near, and stated that they were on their way to Delano to select a piece of land for a home. "Delano," he said, "is a thriving town of half a thousand population, on the line of the Southern Pacific Railroad, about 90 miles northerly from Los Angeles, and thirty-two miles from Bakersfield."

The gentleman and his wife, neither of them more than 30 years of age, were dressed in Khaki suits, with leggings to match, and had evidently started out to make a thorough investigation before purchasing. I sat with them on the train and we talked about the opportunities that are being presented in California for the "homeseeker." Both the husband and wife were born in California, but this was the first step they had ever taken toward securing a home.

"How much," I asked, "are you figuring on having to invest, in order to carry out your plans?"

"I have available only about $1000, but I believe, with that as a starter, can, by applying my earnings, handle twenty acres. I want to set out five acres in oranges, five in peaches or grapes, and ten acres in alfalfa. I can buy, so I am told, good land for those purposes without a developed water supply, for $1000 for twenty acres, and pay only $250 down; or I can buy the same kind of land, with pumping plant water developed for $2500 and pay $500 down and $500 a year thereafter, with interest at 6 or 7 per cent. I am going to look into both propositions, and decide on which I think is the better. For the present, I will put up a small house, which I can purchase in sections, ready to erect, for about $50. My friends will have their houses on adjoining lands, so that our wives will be company to each other."

Views in Delano.

"Where will you get the income from which to pay for your land?" I asked.

"I intend setting out ten acres in alfalfa the first year. I will get at least five cuttings, of one and a half tons to each cutting, to the acre, on which the profit will be not less than a ton, or a total of $300 each year. I am hoping that I can buy my orange trees this fall for less than $1 each, so that $450 will pay for setting out the five-acre orange grove. My five acres of peaches or grapes will cost me only about $100. I will pay for these out of my earnings during the year. I will realize a profit on my grapes after the third year, and on my oranges after the fifth year. After that I intend spending all my spare time on the place and make of it one of the prettiest homes in the vicinity of Delano. I do not want to be dependent upon wages all my life."

I then turned to the wife and said: "What do you think of the plans? Can you carry out your part of the contract?"

"I am willing to try," she answered. "My husband is called away from home a great deal, and I have not always been able to accompany him, and I am left alone. I do not think I will mind being left on the farm, since there will be near neighbors. I can look after the place, and see that the work goes on during his absence. I want a home, and I have always favored an orange grove and other fruit."

We arrived in Delano, and, after getting settled at the hotel, went out to learn what we could about the town and the surrounding country.

We called on the business men and found them wide-awake, and enthusiastic over the future prospects of their town. We met R. K. Brundage, who, prior to locating in Delano, lived in San Francisco; John J. Schlitz, who came from Fresno county; H. P. Randall, from Alhambra; S. F. B. Morse, from Boston; J. E. Yoakum, from Los Angeles; H. Hawley, from Wisconsin; R. W. Lockridge, from Virginia; A. M. Collins, from Seattle; Harold Gibson, from Los Angeles; W. F. Boone, from Indiana; E. C. Clark, from Visalia; L. L. Clark, from Visalia; L. C. Sharp, from Chicago; C. J. Sieders, from Riverside; Charles K. Seeber, from Pasadena; B. F. Stradley, from Mendocino county; G. T. Nighbert, from Bakersfield; A. Borel, from San Francisco; Ben Thomas, from Butte county; F. C. Shaw, from Los Angeles; Edwin Alderson, from Los Angeles; L. C. Crow, from San Joaquin county; A. Perrier, from San Francisco; F. W. Cantleberry, from Wyoming; W. C. Brunner, from Tulare; Y. S. Valencia, from Sonora, Mex.; C. H. Biggen, from Los Angeles; John Eberlin, from Orange; J. L. Wasson from Hanford; Charles C. Albert, from Fowler; A. Vieux, from Los Angeles; W. J. Browning, from Tulare; Peter Doran, from Ireland; L. Robertson, from North Carolina; F. E. Hare, from Bakersfield; C. F. McHarvey, from Fresno county.

PLENTY OF LAND.

In answer to the question as to the extent of undeveloped land, needing settlers, adjacent to Delano, R. K. Brundage said: "We have a great abundance of land from which you can make a selection. The country is level for miles in any direction, and I think it is safe to say that there are locations, of twenty acres each, for 5000 families, on land tributary to Delano. We want those who will settle on the land to be the ones to buy. There are no hardships incident to locating, such as you find in some counties. No hard winters, no pests, no rocks, nor trees to remove, and only two things to consider—soil and water. Water can be had by pumping on every acre of the land near Delano. It is the advent of the pumping plant that has started the activity in the sales of lands near Delano."

TAUGHT FROM EXPERIENCE.

J. L. Wasson, whom we next met, said: "I have lived in Delano for the past twenty-two years. I have been carrying on what is called dry farming a great part of the time, raising hay with varying success. This year I have 360 acres in wheat. I am going to put in a pumping plant, with electric power, and be prepared to irrigate eighty acres. I will set it out in alfalfa and grapes. The present conditions surrounding Delano are more favorable for its future prosperity than at any time in my experience of the past twenty-odd years. The principal reason is, because of the abundant and sure supply of water which is being developed, through the advent of the gas engine and electric power.

MANY LOS ANGELES PEOPLE.

H. Hawley, speaking of the progress of the town of Delano, and of the Los Angeles people who are interested, said: "You will be surprised at the number of Los Angeles people who have already made investments in and near Delano. Not all of them in land, but in various enterprises. I can recall the names of W. F. Marks, Edwin Alderson, J. C. Williams, A. Guy William., C. M. Myers, W. F. Bryant, H. B. Smith, W. B. Alderson, E. Van Etten, Marco Hellman, W. H. Wise, John Rupp, J. E. Yoakum, G. L. Robertson, C. T. Clauson, W. L. Cleveland, A. H. Wise, A. J. Kiggens, G. A. Hart, P. B. Sherwood, W. L. Norris, W. H. Holdridge, Perry I. Wilson, Frank J. Thomas, C. A. Fay, D. H. Hart, F. C. Ensign and others. Our town is moving ahead nicely. We have recently added a national bank, electric lights, cold storage plant, garage, a newspaper, and other lines of business. The new bank building, costing $15,000, is completed. The Masons are going to erect this year a $15,000 lodge-room, the plans being already accepted. It is the intention to have a creamery here very soon. The spirit of progress is with us. Orange growers, raisin growers, and general farmers from everywhere are investing here."

DEVELOPING WATER SUPPLY.

H. P. Randall, whom we met, said: "There is a large section of country extending from ten miles south of Delano to twelve miles north, and eighteen miles east to the foothills of the Sierra Nevada Mountains, which is all level land, and can be set out in any kind of fruit, and is particularly well adapted to the growing of oranges. A water supply is being developed on this land, by sinking wells, from 100 to 125 feet deep, the water rising to within forty to fifty feet of the surface. Electric power or distillate engines, are being used for pumping, making the cost of the water supply merely nominal. This land, with water developed, can be purchased for from $85 to $125 an acre. The terms, to those who actually go on the land and improve it, are made very liberal, paying only a part down and the balance in a term of years. Among some of those who have located near Delano many have already contracted to plant their land either in oranges, grapes, alfalfa, peaches or apricots. Mr. Lathon has purchased eighty acres, and will set it all out in rhubarb. There is an opening for some one to set out forty or fifty acres in early strawberries, which can be marketed here from March to August."

PLENTY OF WATER.

E. C. Clark, speaking along the line of the strides that are being made in the developing of a water supply for irrigation, tributary to Delano, said: "While there are at least 60,000 to 70,000 acres of land tributary to Delano, that are adapted to raising all kinds of fruit, there are four or five tracts where large pumping plants are being installed, and this land is being placed on the market in small tracts, of from twenty acres upward, including the water supply. This is encouraging more rapid settlement, as it is not every person who has the money to put in a pumping plant, but there are many who can buy the land, on easy terms, and pay their part of the cost of the developed water, which is less on a large tract than a small one. Adjoining, and between these lands, are other tracts of just as good soil, with the same abundance of water beneath the surface, which can be purchased for as low as $30 an acre, and the purchaser develop his own water supply. In some cases several persons have joined, and put in one plant on a body of land, dividing the cost in proportion to their acreage. There are some who prefer an individual plant. These pumping plants can be installed at a cost, on the average, of $15 an acre, although cases may be cited of less than that, and in other cases more. There have been no dry wells. The fact that electric power has been brought to Delano, at a cost for the power lines alone of over $40,000, shows that capitalists are fully aware of our future possibilities, and are ready to expend large sums to help develop the country."

ARTESIAN WATER.

About fifteen miles northwest of Delano, F. C. Shaw informed us, several artesian wells are being sunk, eight being now completed and flowing, the object being to carry this natural supply of water, without pumping, to the adjacent lands, by means of ditches. This will develop between 3000 and 10,000 acres. "In every direction," said Mr. Shaw, "supplies of water are being developed, and so far all have been a success. It is only a question of time and capital until all this country will have an abundant water supply, since it is to be had for the drilling."

John E. Yoakum said that in his opinion, Delano is destined to make a town of several thousand population, the way the country is settling up. The pumping plant will be utilized on thousands of acres that heretofore has been used only for sheep pasture and grain. The town site of Delano is one mile square, part being divided into lots, and the remainder in five and six acre tracts. When the time comes to incorporate Delano, bonds can be issued for a municipal pumping plant. "I believe," said Mr. Yoakum, "there is no section better adapted to growing citrus fruits, and the development of these lands will be very rapid."

Peter Doran, who has resided in Delano for the past twenty-seven years, speaking of the climate, said: "It is fine. While we have some warm weather, yet it is needed for our oranges, grapes and other fruits. As to its effect on health, it is well known that we never have any sunstrokes, and at Delano, on account of there being only pumping plants, we have no malaria. It is a healthy climate and attractive to those who are seeking for the famed '300 sunny days.'"

Delano has a Board of Trade, with Ben Thomas president and W. T. Boone, secretary.

S. F. B. Morse informed us that the class of people who are coming to Delano to locate, are those who will make a very desirable addition to any community. They generally have enough capital to make a success of the venture and are not only considering the profits to be derived from securing the land, but the many days of sunshine and the open winter months. They look with favor on this new country where there are so many advantages, and so few drawbacks.

VISITING THE PUMPING PLANTS.

We then drove out in the country. On the Orange Farm, near Delano, they have two wells, one of fifty-six feet and the other 132 feet, the water rising to within twenty-eight feet of the surface. A 14-horse-power gas engine is pumping, they told us, seventy inches of water, irrigating six acres of alfalfa and twelve acres of young orange trees, the cost of pumping being only eight cents an hour. One man runs the engine and takes care of the irrigating. They are preparing to carry the water in pipes two miles for irrigating. Electric power will be installed, the wells having a capacity of 100 inches. They use stove distillate at present for the engine. Their six acres of alfalfa brought a return of $80 an acre last year.

William Atkinson, one-half mile north of Delano, has ten acres. He came on the place one year ago. He has set out five acres in raisin grapes, which are doing well. He raises vegetables and melons on the balance of his land. The well is eighty-four feet deep, the water coming to within thirty-four feet of the surface. The 3-horse-power engine supplies an abundance of water at a cost of 12 cents an hour, using No. 1 distillate. In the family orchard are growing oranges, lemons, quinces, plums, apricots, pears, apples, figs, mulberries, peaches and apricots. His most successful vegetable crops were melons, chilis and tomatoes. The pumping plant cost $790, but has a capacity for several times the present acreage.

S. C. Craig, recently from Michigan, has 100 acres, three miles from Delano. At the house he has a domestic pumping plant with a 3-horse-power engine. The seven-inch well is 136 feet deep, the water rising to within seventy-four feet of the surface, supplying about fifteen inches of water. This plant was put in last October and cost $505. Another plant, on the same one hundred acres, has a 15-inch well, down 156 feet, lifting the water ninety feet with a 40-horse-power engine, supplying fifty inches. Mr. Craig intends putting out forty acres in oranges, ten acres in peaches, ten acres in pears, ten acres in alfalfa, and the balance of the land in grapes. This plant cost an average of $20 an acre. He intends putting in still another plant and use electric power. Mr. Craig believes in an open-bottom well and no perforations.

We next came to the farm of John Ederling, who has eighty acres, now in wheat. He has just installed a 30-horse-power engine on a well 147 feet deep, lifting the water fifty feet, and obtaining fifty inches of water, which will probably be seventy-five inches later on. He stated that he never had operated a gas engine before, but has no trouble. He intends setting out ten acres in oranges and the rest of his land in alfalfa. He came to Delano last December from Orange. The pumping plant cost him an average of $25 an acre.

We were much interested in the 160 acres owned, and to be farmed, jointly by Messrs. Brooks, Woodward, Hovey, Jackson, Nutt, Armstrong, Wright and Rounthwaite, each twenty acres. They have a fine well on the northeast corner of the land, being 150 feet deep, the water rising to fifty-five feet, the 35-horse-power engine pumping eighty inches, which is sufficient for the whole tract. This plant cost an average of only $11 an acre. Their plans are to set out the land in alfalfa, grapes, oranges and vegetables. Four out of the eight owners will locate at once on the land. Five are from Hollywood, one from New Jersey, and two from Los Angeles.

Louis Bayha and family came from Long Beach to Delano last November. They purchased forty-one acres and have just installed a 10-horse-power engine on a well eighty feet deep, the water rising to within twenty-one feet of the surface. They are intending to raise alfalfa and conduct a dairy.

E. Bebler, from Los Angeles, has purchased 160 acres and has his well down to the first water strata, sixty-one feet, the last being thirty-four feet, and pumping seventy-five inches. He intends putting out alfalfa, eucalyptus, walnuts, and vegetables. His three acres in potatoes are making a fine showing.

C. C. Albert, one and a half miles east of Delano is intending to put in a pumping plant, he having been engaged in dry farming only. He owns 640 acres.

Andrew Vieux, recently installed a pumping plant on eighty acres two miles from Delano, the well being 125 feet deep, the lift fifty feet, and the supply eighty inches, with a 25-horse-power engine. He will set it in alfalfa, oranges and grapes. Mr. Vieux intends putting in another plant, five miles southeast of Delano, on 160 acres, and set it all to oranges.

R. J. Martin, living less than one mile west of Delano, has a pumping plant for irrigating alfalfa and a family orchard. The well is 106 feet deep, the water rising to within eighteen feet of the surface, and the twelve-horse-power engine pumping water enough to fill a six-inch discharge pipe. The plant cost $850, or less than $11 an acre, for the eighty acres, which it will irrigate.

Mrs. A. M. Waite, living half a mile west of Delano, intends putting alfalfa, oranges and grapes on her eighty acres. The well is 108 feet deep, water coming to within 24 feet of the surface, the ten-horse-power engine lifting forty inches at a cost per hour of 9 cents. The plant cost about $850, or $10.50 an acre.

M. Young and R. H. Hiett, one and a half miles northwest of Delano, have 160 acres and recently installed a pumping plant, the well being sixty feet deep, the fifteen-horse-power engine lifting the water twenty-two feet and filling a five-inch discharge pipe. They will set out alfalfa, oranges and grapes. The plant cost an average of $10 an acre.

R. A. Corson and A. W. Dickinson, who came from Pasadena one year ago, have 320 acres, four miles north of Delano. They have already set out forty acres in grapes, ten acres in alfalfa, and 100 acres in wheat. They will put out ten acres in oranges next year, and probably twenty acres in Calimyrna figs. The well is 190 feet deep, water rising to within thirty-four feet of the surface, the twenty-five-horse-power engine lifting seventy-five inches. It cost an average of $10 an acre for the 160 acres it will supply.

Edwin Alderson is developing water on his land ten miles north of Delano. The well is ninety-two feet deep, the water standing at twenty-seven feet. With a 7 D-2 electric motor he is pumping about seventy inches, and will irrigate 100 acres. The average cost per acre is less than $13. He has five acres in oranges, twelve in peanuts, ten in alfalfa, five in beets for stock, five in grapes, four in Indian corn, four in Egyptian corn. Next year he will set out forty acres more of oranges. Other pumping plants will be put in later. Mr. Alderson thinks the alluvial soil is particularly adapted to growing peanuts.

On a large tract of land, nine miles north of Delano, three large pumping plants and two artesian wells are supplying nearly 500 inches of water. There are now five miles of cement pipes laid, and this will be increased to twelve miles. We did not learn the average cost per acre of the water supply. Ten acres are set to oranges, 380 to grapes, 220 to peaches, 20 acres to figs, and 20 acres to alfalfa. It is the intention to plant 1000 acres in oranges and 1000 acres in peaches. Twenty-five acres will be planted in Louisiana sugar cane to be manufactured into molasses, and increase the acreage as the market demands. Bermuda onions and sweet potatoes will also be extensively grown.

Frank Schlitz, living about eight miles north and east of Delano, has a well eighty feet deep, the water being lifted seventy feet with a twenty-horse-power electric motor, supplying eighty inches. His forty acres of alfalfa yielded ten and a half tons to the acre. He figures his water will cost $1.50 an acre per year, and he can sell his hay in the field at $7.50 a ton and clear $5.50 a ton, or a profit on his forty acres of $2200 a year. He has one acre rented out for hog pasture for $67 a year. He intends setting out sixty acres more in alfalfa. It cost him $663 to install his electric motor. He pays a flat rate of $500 for six months and a meter rate after that, with a minimum charge of $20 a month for the six months remaining.

E. B. Armstrong, living eight miles northeast of Delano, has a well seventy-two feet deep, and uses no casing, the pit, 6x8, being forty-seven feet deep. With a fifteen-horse-power engine he lifts fifty inches of water. The well has a capacity of 100 inches. He will set out 160 acres in alfalfa and 160 in grapes, and will put in another pumping plant. The average cost per acre is only about $5 for the water supply.

G. H. Post and H. D. Post, from Pasadena, have purchased 160 acres of land, seven miles east of Delano, and are putting down a well, which is expected to be 200 feet deep. They have not yet decided whether they will use a gas engine or electric power.

W. C. Timmons, one mile west of Delano, has a well only thirty-five feet deep, the lift being thirty feet. His four-horse-power engine supplies between fifteen and twenty inches of water, with which he will irrigate twenty acres. The total cost was only $350, or $17.50 an acre.

C. H. Biggen, speaking of wells and pumping plants, said: "The wells about Delano cost, for drilling, $1 a foot, for the first 100 feet. The casing will cost about the same per foot. To dig the pit will cost $25 to $50, and the lumber about the same. A well 100 feet deep will cost from $250 to $300. To install a ten-horse-power pumping plant will cost about $500, and twenty horse power, about $1250. The average cost of operating a gas engine of twenty-horse power, based on 1 cent an hour per horse power, would be $2 for ten hours. This would be an average cost of 2 cents an acre per day. The pumping plant is growing in popularity each year."

We drove over the country for miles, past hundreds of acres that have never seen the plow, but have every indication of being productive soil. My friends were enthusiastic over the prospects, but were particularly impressed with the idea of having some of their friends join them in buying a tract of land, each twenty acres. "Here is a tract of 160 acres," said the wife, "that is as level as can be, and I know it is good soil from the way the native grasses grow. It can be had for $35 an acre. That would be only $700, if we paid all cash. The first payment could be only $150. Our share of the cost of the pumping plant would be only about $250. We might live in a tent for the first six months. We would thus save at least $120 on house rent. Just think! In one year our alfalfa from ten acres would bring in $400. In three years our five acres of grapes will bring us $400 a year. In five years our oranges will return us at least $1000. We could then sell for $5000 or $6000, if we wanted to do so. What do you think about it, husband?"

"It looks good to me. Since you are so willing to help me, I am going to make a cash deposit on this land, and get our crowd together."

BUYS VALUABLE FRONTAGE.

The Hunter-Ford Company reports the sale of the property located at No. 149 West Pico street for T. M. Todd of Long Beach to Leon T. Shettler of this city. The lot has a frontage of 60 feet on Pico street and a depth of 125 feet. The consideration is said to have been $45,000, or at the rate of $750 per front foot. Mr. Shettler has purchased this property as a permanent home for his automobile business and is having plans prepared for the erection of a two-story-and-basement garage, machine shop and warehouse.

Some Facts and Figures

A Brief Resume of California's Most Scenic Incline Railway.

The Mt. Washington Incline Railroad is owned and operated exclusively by the Los Angeles & Mt. Washington Ry. Co.

Robt. Marsh is President and A. St. C. Perry is General Manager of the road.

The length of the road is three-fifths of a mile—practically as long as the Mt. Lowe Incline.

It cost $42,000.

The application for franchise was made one year ago—in May, 1908.

The original plans were for an exposed cable incline at a cost not to exceed $27,000.

To guarantee the highest efficiency and safety to the public, the plans have been changed to a concealed cable at an additional cost of $15,000, making a total cost of $42,000.

The permanent surveys were completed in July, 1908.

Mr. E. S. Cobb is the engineer who worked out the plans, and has been consulting engineer during the construction work.

Active construction began in October, 1908. On the original specifications, the road was to have been completed by December 15, 1908.

The solid concrete roadbed was constructed by the Mercereau Bridge & Construction Company.

The Llewellyn Iron Works were the general contractors for entire plant, equipment and cars.

Westinghouse apparatus is used.

MT. WASHINGTON INCLINE OPENS TO PUBLIC TOMORROW

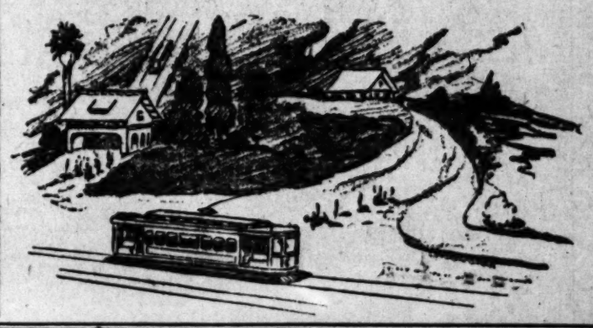
Tomorrow Will Be Red Letter Day in the History of Mount Washington

The Incline Railway—after so many unavoidable delays—will be opened to public traffic.

Since its completion, two weeks ago, it has been put through every rigid test known to the engineering profession. General Manager Perry has been constantly on the ground during these two weeks, together with a corps of prominent local engineers—and all pronounce it in perfect working order and absolutely safe. Immense loads of sand have been repeatedly carried up and down without taxing the mechanism in the least degree—loads greatly in excess of the maximum weight to be carried in ordinary traffic.

The cars—now resplendent with their final coats of paint—will comfortably seat twenty-four people—but have a carrying capacity of thirty. It will be the policy of the company, however, not to carry more than the cars will seat.

Regular trips will be made to expeditiously handle all traffic.



A unique feature of the Mt. Washington Incline is the telephone connections. Each car is equipped with a 'phone and the conductor is always in communication with the engineers in the power house above.

In the building of this road every precaution has been taken and no expense has been spared to absolutely guarantee safety and comfort to the passengers. In the operation of the road the same precautions will be taken. The conductor in charge of the cars is H. D. Fox, a former Southern Pacific conductor of long experience, and of utmost reliability. C. L. Meyers, a mechanical engineer, is in charge of the power house—assisted by Mark Meyers, assistant engineer.

Thus opens to the public California's most scenic railway—a road that has been built in the face of great engineering difficulties. Problems have been solved in its construction that have probably never before arisen in the building of incline railways. It has horizontal and vertical curves requiring the greatest possible skill in planning and erecting.

From now on Mt. Washington will have a regular service to the summit that will bring her beauties within twenty minutes of the city's business district. A service as safe—as convenient—as comfortable as human brains and human hands can make it.

The company extends to all through the columns of The Eagle, a hearty invitation to take the trip soon and enjoy something entirely different in mountain climbing.

TO BUILD UNIQUE STORE.

partment Arcade on West Seventh, Near Figueroa, Will Be First in California.

unique department store, to be wn as the Seventh-street Arcade, being erected on the north side of t Seventh street, just west of Fig-ua street, by George E. Hunts-an and the Niles Pease Investment mpany. The structure, which is to a single story in height, will ve a frontage of 210 feet and depth of 60 feet. It will be di-ded into twelve large sections, ed by a continuous series of arch-s set about ten feet back from street entrances. This type of ar-e will embody a feature in mer-ntile construction which is new to uthern California.

Most of the store apartments have ready been leased for a period of ve years, a butcher shop, a grocery d a dry goods firm being among businesses which have sought rters in the building. According the plans of the leasers, all the departments are to be under a single management for purposes of convenience where mutual commercial interests are involved. Each lessee is, however, to retain control of his own strictly individual business affairs.

Grading was begun last week, and the contracts for the construction call for the completion of the structure by September 1. The front of the building is to be of white brick, and the floors are to be of cement throughout. The total cost of the improvement will be about $20,000. Dennis & Farwell are the architects.

BUILDS BEAUTIFUL HOME.

Large Fourteen-Room House at Fifth and Kingsley to Cost Nearly Thirty Thousand.

Edward Halbriter is erecting at the southwest corner of Fifth and Kingsley streets a beautiful fourteen-room home, which is to cost in the neighborhood of $30,000. The exterior of the first story is of Chatsworth Park stone veneer, and the second story is plastered. The first floor contains a music room, large hall, living-room, library and dining-room. The library is to be finished in Tabasco mahogany, the other rooms in quarter-sawed oak. The decorations and fixtures throughout the house will be made according to special designs.

Five large sleeping chambers and two baths will occupy the second floor, which will be finished in white enamel. A billiard room 20x52 feet, together with a buffet and kitchen, will occupy the third floor. All the rooms will be wired for an inter-communicating phone system. A two-story garage is to be built at the rear of the lot. Frank M. Tyler is the supervising architect for the improvements.

BUY LAST OF RANCH.

Large Acreage in San Gabriel Valley Near Ramona Tract Soon to Be Subdivided.

The Janss Investment Company last week secured from the Valley View Land and Water Company a half interest in the remaining acreage of the Garvey ranch in the San Gabriel Valley, and will immediately assume the subdividing, management and selling of the property. The tract, which embodies 490 acres, is valued at $220,500.

The tract is northeast of the city and about twenty minutes out on the Covina car line. It is to the southeast of the Ramona Acres tract, which has been so successfully handled by the Janss Company. The deal just completed closes up practically the last acreage area in the section. The property was acquired from R. Garvey by M. N. Newmark for the Valley View Land and Water Company about three years ago.

OPEN NEW SUBDIVISION.

Lookout Mountain Park, a beautiful residence subdivision, one mile northwest of Hollywood, beyond the Laurel Cañon, was opened yesterday. Here, at an altitude commanding a view of the mountains and valley, a boulevard has been constructed, on either side of which residence lots have been laid out. The Lookout Mountain Park Land and Water Company, in carrying out the project, has in mind the establishing of a high-class resort and residence section. The building of the Los Angeles-Pacific tunnels brings Hollywood and the vicinity of Lookout Mountain Park many minutes nearer to Los Angeles, and Sunset boulevard is now being built from Los Angeles to Laurel Cañon. The new subdivision will be handled by W. W. Norton & Co., something like 700 lots being now ready for sale on the weekly payment plan.

Vermont Square

The Home Builders' Tract

This fine new subdivision, like its companion tract, Vermont Avenue Square, is the home builders' own. Though it is scarcely 30 days since the map became of record, three new houses have already been started, and others will follow quickly.

Location, improvements, building restrictions—everything tends to attract those who make their own homes. Special inducements are offered for a limited period to those who buy and build at once.

The Rapid Building Up of Vermont Square Will Enhance the Value of Lots in Like Proportion. For Home Building and Profitable Investment Combined It Presents Opportunities Seldom Equaled

Water pipes are now laid and in service over the entire tract. City engineers are now establishing the grades for the cement work, and the general work of improvement will be pushed as rapidly as possible. ¶ Prices are very low. The special discounts reduce them considerably. The lots are offered on their merits, and home builders and investors are invited to investigate on this basis. ¶ Vermont Square is on Vernon, Normandie and Western Avenues. Take Grand Avenue car on Broadway marked "West 48th Street"—5-cent fare—and get off at Vermont Avenue or Normandie Avenue.

THE MARKETS.

LOCAL PRODUCE MARKET.

The past week has seen no great changes on the market. The one noticeable feature is the increase that has come in all citrus fruits as well as apples. The arrival of other fresh fruits has been steady, and the total receipts sufficiently large to put the market in good shape, and the general consuming trade has been demanding the fresh fruits in preference to citrus stock. Most any other varieties which have been obtainable throughout the winter season. Navel oranges are moving slowly, and the most that are bringing a car lot sale are more than $2 a box. Blood oranges are in their season, and are selling at $1.50 as the highest price, per half box. Tangerines are also moving slowly. The few that arrive are as a rule puffy and without juice, which mitigates against their sale. Lemons are the only fruits that are moving at all regularly. They are beginning to feel the regular summer demand and prices on them are comparatively firm.

Egg receipts continue to grow stronger, but there has been no change in the market. Reports from the East show the production to be growing better with the arrival of real summer weather in many sections, and although prices are high throughout the country, and very firm right here, it is not expected that there will be any wide fluctuations in the immediate future; as a few dealers have predicted. Sales yesterday were fair, both in local and outside eggs. Receipts were 228 cases.

Butter arrivals were 5,437 pounds. The usual demand prevailed in cooking butter, and creamery also sold regularly throughout the week. The present market will easily be maintained throughout the next month, owing to the fact that it will be a month before eastern receipts are heavy, and in the meantime local production of butter is decreasing.

Cheese receipts were only 364 pounds. On the other days of the week the arrivals were much heavier and the market on a number of local and northern varieties declined. Dealers in all of the eastern varieties are expected with the heavier production and because of this month and next are usually the months in which these declines to the lowest prices occur.

New potatoes are arriving in large quantities every day. They are selling in quantity at a hundred-pound price equal to the top price of last week at this time. Many of the new early rose, red and white varieties are going to Nevada and Arizona. Yesterday's receipts consisted of potatoes were three cars. Onions are moving regularly and arriving at the rate of a car a day. They are unchanged in value, both Cruchella and Texas Bermudas selling at $1.a crate.

Pink beans have been the best sellers in the past week. Black eyes and Lady Washingtons have been next in demand. Receipts have been fair, due to shipments of the growers who held their stock for present high prices. Yesterday two cars of beans arrived.

Fresh vegetables are plentiful. A large consignment of Texas cucumbers was received yesterday from Corpus Christi, and sold at $2.50 a crate. Mexican tomatoes are holding higher right along. Peas are up, bringing as much as 5 and 6 cents a pound. Beans are worth the same amount.

Market on Chicago Pit an Erratic Affair, With Strength of May Options Prominent Feature of the Trading—Shorts Uneasy at Nearness of Enforced Deliveries.

[ASSOCIATED PRESS NIGHT REPORT.]

CHICAGO, May 22.—New high record marks in the pesent were made today in the price of wheat and oats, May wheat advancing 1.50-8 and May oats 1 cent 7-8. Corn also was firm, but provisions were only steady.

The wheat market was an erratic affair with the strength of May a prominent feature. Shorts on that delivery were more wary on account of the short time remaining in which to make deliveries. With the exception of the current month the market in general at the start displayed considerable weakness. Later, however, prices bounded sharply, July rallying 1½ cents.

One of the principal bullish factors was a report credited to an official report of one of the western railroads which estimated the winter crop of Kansas at the low figure of 60,000,000 bushels, against the government's estimate of 94,000,000 bushels. Another contributing influence was an improved demand for cash wheat here and in the northwest. The market was never weak during the final hour, but bullish sentiment dominated and a firm tone prevailed at the close.

The range for the day on May was between 1.31 and 1.32 3-8, and for July 1.16 1-4 and 1.17¾. The close showed gains of 1-4 to ½ cent, May being at 1.32 1-4 and July at 1.17¼. Increase in receipts of 197 cars prompted an opening raid on the May delivery which resulted in a break of almost a cent.

The market, however, soon turned strong, and ranged between 65¾@66 7-8 and 66 3-8, the close was firm with prices up 1-8 to ¼ cent, July being at 62 3-4.

Deliveries of oats rose to new high level for the season. There was no change in the general situation. The top for May was reached at 61 1-8, and for July at 54 1-4. The market closed strong at almost the highest point, at net gains of 1-4@5-8 to 1¼ cents, May at 61¼ and July at 54 1-8.

Trade in provisions was quiet. Closing prices were 2½ cents lower to 2½@5 cents lower.

The quotations were as follows: Flour, ... winter patents, 4.30@4.60; straights, ... spring patents, 4.50@4.70; straights, ... bakers, 2.60@3.00; No. 2 rye, 4.5... mixing barley, 72@75½; fair to choice, ... 74@77; flaxseed, No. 1 Southwestern, 1.60½; No. 1 Northwestern, 1.75½; timothy seed, 3.50; clover, 9.60; mess pork, per bbl., 18.20@18.40; lard, per 100 lbs., 10.45; short ribs, sides (loose), 10.00@10.15; short clear sides (boxed), 10.35@10.50.

New York Cotton Market.

[By Private Wire to E. F. Hutton & Co., Members New York Stock Exchange, No. 111 West Third street.]

NEW YORK, May 22.—The recent week's activity market has been very uninteresting and the public participation has dwindled to a small holding, leaving operations on the stock exchange largely to room traders. The monotony and narrowness of stock movements have been such as to discourage speculation for the public. However, it is worthy of note and much significance may be attached to the future in the closing prices of the week, which were at about the best.

The most marked feature was the buying of steel common to a new high record. Continued absorption on this stock across the board without spectacular manipulation speaks well for a much higher price later in the year, the full restoration of steel commodity prices with an abnormal tonnage likely to be maintained during the year and the possibility of a 6 per cent. dividend are reasons for the buying. Crop conditions appear to be better in most localities, although it is too early to make predictions. There is a great stimulus in the banking business, and conditions prevail that will work for continued and healthy improvement.

Logan & Bryan's letter follows: "Cotton opened itself to be a logical market pretty much all day, except the last half hour of the session, when the absence of selling pressure for the moment permitted the manipulators to run for the timid floor shorts. The rain has brought rains in Texas and with a spirit of relief, but the value of rains in Texas is purely problematical; with so late a start the plant cannot survive anything except perfect weather, and it is to be seriously doubted if the rains accomplished any real relief except to those short of the option market. The outlook of the June condition and acreage report is causing considerable comment, and while there are rationalists the average guess is remaining like 15 to 17, and the acreage will probably show about 1 per cent. reduction. The market will reconcile itself to about that level of figures and any decided change would be a surprise to the market influence. Wall Street was buying on Thursday, manifesting a line of cotton that evidently is not getting top-heavy, and the real bulls were patient and willing to permit lower levels for a time. Commission houses were indifferent to the market, hoping to permit their customers to re-enter at a lower level than where those sold out. Unless some bad turn occurs in the weather over Sunday, it is likely the floor crowd will try to hammer the market in the early part of next week, as the setback of about 70 points from high levels has renewed their courage. Should a good break occur next week buying would be in order, as the condition report might contain a surprise, if so it would be a bullish one and an analysis of the report, were it to be at the figures now guessed, would only indicate a crop of around twelve and one-quarter million, which would be eagerly sought for by the largest supplier of spindles the world ever knew."

Weather:—South, hard rain nearly all night at Texarkana; light showers at Tulsa. Rained heavily this morning at Muskogee and Ardmore. Now partly cloudy to clear, pleasant.

SAN PEDRO HARBOR INVESTMENTS

SAFE AND UNUSUALLY PROFITABLE

The Bonds of the Pacific Wharf & Storage Co., secured by San Pedro Harbor Frontage, are a safe and unusually profitable investment. Sound 7 per cent. investments are rare, and will be rarer during the next few years. These Bonds ensure the holder a 7 per cent. tax free earning over a period of 20 years. They are a first mortgage on developed, splendidly located San Pedro Harbor Frontage. No better security could be desired.

A stock bonus, par value $500, accompanies every bond. It makes the bond buyer an actual owner in deep-water frontage, on the same basis as the great corporations that have invested so many million dollars at San Pedro.

The property of the Company at San Pedro adjoins the Salt Lake Railway's holdings, and is almost directly opposite the Southern Pacific's. It will consist of eighty acres of ground, twenty acres of which are already in place, together with the rock breakwater which retains them.

The property will afford 8000 feet of dockage on the Inner Harbor—deep-water dockage for vessels of the largest size—as well as locations for bonded warehouses, manufacturing industries, etc.—where the railroads and deep-water vessels meet.

The company has already expended $225,000 upon its property. Bonds to the amount of $170,000 have been sold, and are held by some of the strongest financial interests in Southern California.

The Pacific Wharf and Storage Company has prepared an interesting map, showing San Pedro Harbor developments. A copy of this map, circulars and engineers' reports may be secured by applying at the Company's office, 624-625 Merchants' Trust building, No. 207 S. Broadway, this city, or at the office of Louis Blankenhorn, secretary of the Company, 804 Security building.

President Hopes to Save Millions.

Cabinet Members Expected to Make Cuts in All Departments.

Secretary MacVeagh Will Go Over the Estimates to Make Them Fit.

Enterprises of Importance to Be Saved from Ruthless Action.

[BY DIRECT WIRE TO THE TIMES.]

WASHINGTON, May 23.—[Exclusive Dispatch.] Secretary Meyers's cut of $10,000,000 in the Navy Department estimates for the next fiscal year is a sample of what may be expected on the part of other Cabinet officials. It may not be possible to reduce expenditures in all the departments to as noticeable a degree as in those pertaining to the army and navy branches of the military service, but a thing that will be accomplished in all directions is a more intelligent idea of the relationship between, or rather harmonising of, estimates and appropriations.

Secretary of the Treasury MacVeagh expects to have in hand by June first the estimate of all the heads of departments. Between then and the time for the meeting of Congress in regular session in December, painstaking study and investigation, with a view to ascertaining the exact requirement of various bureaus embraced in the different departments, as to just what work each is performing with a detailed analysis of results as compared to the expense involved will be carried on. It means an extra burden on Cabinet shoulders, especially those of the Secretary of the Treasury, and may interfere somewhat with vacation season plans, but it will establish matters on a new basis and render intelligent coöperation between the executive departments and Congress easier of attainment in the future.

OLD THEORY, NEW PRACTICE.

Theoretically the Secretary of the Treasury always passes upon the estimates of all the departments of the government, but in the recent past, in fact, as far back as any one can remember, it has been a mere form. Usually estimates have not reached the Treasury Department until almost on the eve of transmitting them to Congress, allowing no time for an analysis.

Frequently it has been necessary to send out hurry calls to some of the departments in order to get estimates together so that the Secretary of the Treasury might even make a pretense of performing his function as an intermediary. There is to be no more of this superficial, or positive lack of any consideration of estimates save by the officials most directly concerned with each separate subdivision of the government's annual budget. It is determined that the respective Cabinet officials, after the tentative estimates are submitted for consideration of the Cabinet Auditing Committee, created by President Taft, will devote the intervening months before Congress meets to getting more familiar than has been possible under former conditions with the relationship of their own departmental needs to economical apportionment of the funds provided for in the supply bills.

NO FOOLISH ECONOMY.

Economy in government expenditures, as embraced in the scheme inaugurated at the present administration, involves important features aside from the plan of reducing appropriations and keeping them within the revenues. It has been pointed out recently that probably there have been quite as many cases where public works have suffered from shrunken appropriations as there have been cases in which over-appropriation has been in evidence. There is extravagance both ways.

Approach to retrenchment and economy is to be made on the theory that the country is committed to certain permanent policies of expenditure and there is no intention to economize in such matters so far as to curtail plans for carrying them out to the full extent.

REVOLUTION SPREADING.

Rebels Attack and Seize Two Hatian Cities—Fighting Hard With Government Forces.

[ASSOCIATED PRESS NIGHT REPORT.]

CAPE HAYTIAN (Hayti) May 23.—[By courier from Monte Christo, Santo Domingo.] The revolutionary movement is spreading. Gen. Camacho, the former Governor of Monte Christo, who is working in unison with Gen. Quirito Felics for the overthrow of the government, has attacked and seized Guayabin and Dajabon, which are on the Haytian frontier, the Dajabon River being the northwest boundary between Hayti and the Dominican republic.

There has been hard fighting between the revolutionists and the loyal forces at Monte Christo. The fate of José Bordas, Governor of Puerto Plata, is not known, but it is reported that he is either dead or a prisoner.

Communications are interrupted and government troops must reach the disaffected districts by sea, if at all.

PRINCESS'S BABY SHOES.

Footgear for the Royal Infant of Holland Made to Order in Massachusetts.

BROCKTON (Mass.) May 23.—[Exclusive Dispatch.] The tiny feet of Holland's baby Princess are to be incased in American soft soled shoes—the most costly infant's shoes that were ever made in this country. They bear the stamp of a Brockton firm, and the future ruler of the little Dutch kingdom will not want for shoes for all sorts of conditions, for there are seventeen pairs in the order just finished.

In one of the seventeen pairs the lining is a piece of satin from Queen Wilhelmina's wedding gown. Another pair is made of cloth of gold. One pair is of cloth of silver and still another has the finest white Parisian kid.

GREENBACKS BY BUSHEL BASKET.

FARMERS ARE HARVESTING 'EM, SAYS CHICAGO MERCHANT.

Leaders in Business of Lake Metropolis Forecast Early Return of Plenty With Expansion in All Lines of Trade—Growth of Confidence Normal and Healthy.

[BY DIRECT WIRE TO THE TIMES.]

CHICAGO, May 23.—[Exclusive Dispatch.] Chicago bankers, manufacturers and business men met the view of those of the East in forecasting an early return of full prosperity. The depression of 1907 and 1908 is declared to be a thing of the past, with the passing flurries and failures here and there having no bad effect on the general faith and the general situation.

"The business of the nation is now on a stable and substantial basis," said A. C. Bartlett, leading merchant, who has just returned from a trip through the West, with the observation that, "farmers are picking up greenbacks and putting them in bushel baskets.

"Our people here in Chicago are enjoying a business which is the direct result of a natural expansion in trade. Prices are down to a basis that is normal and wholesome," he said.

"I have read the statements of the New York business men," said David R. Forgan, president of the National City Bank of Chicago, "and they seem to agree that we are getting back to substantial business conditions. I agree with them. We are doing wonderfully well, considering what we have gone through. It strikes me they are a little slow in New York to appreciate the improved situation. It is almost a matter of history in Chicago and the Middle West. Recent failures cut no figure in the general equation. The tariff discussion in Congress is holding things back. The sooner that question is disposed of the better it will be."

"There is no doubt of marked improvement in business," said E. J. Buffington, president of the Illinois Steel Company. "I can do no better than to repeate what Mr. Corey said, that there has been gradual and well sustained improvement in the steel industry since early in March. There is every indication that the improvement is due to natural and healthy demand for our products."

DEATH IN MOTORBOAT'S WAKE.

Occupants of Speeding Craft on Hudson River Jump Into Water to Save Themselves.

[BY DIRECT WIRE TO THE TIMES.]

NEW YORK, May 23.—[Exclusive Dispatch.] A vivid streak of fire shot half-way across the Hudson River off One Hundred and Twenty-third street about 1 o'clock this afternoon. When the flames disappeared the $12,000 motor boat Libbie was a total wreck, and the four persons who had been gayly sailing down the river in her a few minutes before, had had a narrow escape from death or serious injury.

Albert Hartog, who owned the boat, and his son, Ferdinand, 18 years old, the engineer, Ralph Stenison, and the latter's assistant, a boy, made several trips as far as Fairlee Ferry about noon. On the last trip an explosion occurred. A canvas cover, adjusted to keep the breaking waves off the motor when the boat was going at high speed, was blown fifty feet in the air.

Hartog saw the only hope lay in reaching shore. He swung her around and headed for Manhattan, turning on full speed, but before the boat beached itself the flames got too hot for them and they jumped. All four reached shore. The boat was completely destroyed.

CATHOLIC PRIESTS IN FIGHT WITH THIEVES.

Crash of Glass Wakes Two Fathers and Desperate Struggle in Which Shots Are Fired Follows on Street Before Chicago Church.

[BY DIRECT WIRE TO THE TIMES.]

CHICAGO, May 23.—[Exclusive Dispatch.] Awakened by the crash of glass in the basement of the Holy Angels' Roman Catholic Church, Oakwood boulevard and Vincennes avenue, at 4:30 o'clock this morning, Fathers William Griffin and Timothy O'Shea went from their beds to encounter two burglars.

One of the priests snatched a revolver that lay on top of his dresser, and in the chase after the thieves fired several shots.

Bishop A. J. McGavick, pastor of the church and his brother, J. E. McGavick, assistant pastor, were aroused by the shots, and hurriedly dressed. Not knowing the cause of the shooting, the bishop leaned out of a window and saw the forms of four men struggling between the church and rectory.

"Who are you," exclaimed Bishop McGavick, "and what is the matter?"

Father [illegible] shouted back an answer that [illegible] and Father O'Shea were having a hand-to-hand struggle with burglars.

By this time the entire household was aroused, and the bishop led the way to the aid of his two assistants. Upon the arrival of Bishop McGavick and two or three other priests, Fathers Griffin and O'Shea were found holding one of the burglars. The other had escaped.

Father O'Shea, with a revolver at the thief's head, was leaning over him and Father Griffin was holding him on the ground with a vise-like clutch at his throat.

"Let me up, I'm choking," the man pleaded. The priests raised him from where he lay and holding him tightly, led him into the rectory. A telephone call was sent to the Fifteenth-street station, and the [illegible]rol wagon came at breakneck speed.

On searching the passageway where the burglars were discovered, the police found a lot of silverware wrapped up in a tablecloth. It had been stolen half an hour before from the Maryland Hotel, No. 158 Oakwood boulevard.

A gold chalice, two gold candlesticks, a crucifix and other articles were also found with the silverware. The holy service had been stolen from the altar.

The Rev. Father O'Shea heard the crash of breaking glass and at first thought it was the milkman who had dropped a bottle. On hearing a second crash he arose from bed to investigate.

ENORMOUS.

SQUEEZES OUT THREE MILLION.

PATTEN'S PROFITS ESTIMATED AT THAT SUM.

With But Six More Business Days Left in Month, May Wheat Likely to Be Boosted Much Higher by Frightened Shorts—Small Corner in Oats.

[BY DIRECT WIRE TO THE TIMES.]

CHICAGO, May 23.—[Exclusive Dispatch.] A profit of close to $3,000,000 is already secured by James A. Patten and his followers in the May wheat campaign, which has but six days more to run, as next Saturday will be the last business day in May.

Holdings of the bull leaders at their maximum were 18,000,000 bushels, and their followers had over 20,000,000 bushels. It is the largest play made in wheat since the Leiter deal, but has been unlike Leiter's in sensational features, and from the fact that cash wheat is scarce.

In the three weeks this month there have been only 1,250,000 bushels received in Chicago, of which 1,132,000 bushels came by lake from Duluth, and only 72,000 bushels by rail from the winter wheat section. This is the lightest prices are considered, and shows to the minds of the oldest traders that there is little wheat back in the country.

So far Patten has only had to pay for 2,450,000 bushels of cash wheat, and he expects to get 1,200,000 bushels this week. This will give him all the contract grade of cash wheat in Chicago.

It was the talk of the trade last night that shorts may become scared and bid prices up to $1.40 by next Saturday, if not before. But Patten says he will sell wheat as fast as buyers want it, and that there is to be no corner run by him.

There is a squeeze on in May oats, with the Armour Grain Company and Peavey behind the deal. They forced the price to 61¾ cents, the highest in years, and 1¾ cents over Friday's close. At the top figure there were 500,000 bushels sold and settled, according to some of the trade estimates. The deal is not a large affair.

MINISTERS TO BECOME FANS.

WILL PATRONIZE BASEBALL IF SUNDAY GAMES STOP.

Clergymen and Church Members of Elgin, Ill., Take Friendly Attitude Toward Sport in Waging War Against Sabbath Desecration—May Secure Saturday Half-Holiday.

[BY DIRECT WIRE TO THE TIMES.]

CHICAGO, May 23.—[Exclusive Dispatch.] All the ministers in Elgin and a large number of church members and residents opposed to Sunday baseball today pledged themselves to buy season tickets from the Elgin Baseball Club provided the management would abolish Sunday games, and play ball Saturday afternoon instead.

The action was taken at a meeting of Protestant clergymen, lay members of the various denominations, and others who are anxious to stop the playing of baseball on Sundays.

A committee was appointed to draft resolutions of protest against Sunday games and to confer with the management of the baseball club relative to the proposition of the ministers.

The Rev. Charles L. Morgan, pastor of the First Congregational Church, was appointed chairman of the committee. He announced that if the management of the baseball club will accede to the demand of the clergymen and church members the ministers will start an agitation in favor of closing all factories and industrial establishments in Elgin and vicinity at noon on Saturday to give the employés a chance to attend the ball game.

Immediately after the wedding the couple left for Canada for their honeymoon.

DIRT FLIES.

RIVALS FIGHT.

Intense Struggle for Rights.

Electric Lighting Concerns Have Contest for New Territory.

Workmen Exchange Epithets But Spilling of Blood Is Averted.

Raising of Poles on Vermont Tract Cause of Much Excitement.

AN EXCITING contest between rival electric lighting companies for the control of new territory almost resulted in a pitched battle, yesterday morning, and was witnessed by residents in the vicinity of Western avenue and Forty-eighth street. No blood was spilled, as wiser counsels prevailed, but the members of the opposing construction gangs, who at one time worked so close together that they trod on each other's toes and jostled elbows, exchanged epithets and jibes.

When darkness stopped the work, a forest of poles dotted a landscape hitherto free from them. The rival crews retired, both claiming to have won the fight, but pickets were left to see that no mischief was done during the hours of the night. Today, more excitement is expected.

Residents of the territory for which the Edison Electric and the Los Angeles Gas and Electric companies are contending, have heretofore been required to make deposits to secure extensions of wires to their houses as they observed yesterday's struggle with jubilation.

The first intimation of the impending war came Saturday, when the Edison company began the erection of poles in Vermont square. Scouts sent out by the Los Angeles company reported this move and preparations to compete were at once feverishly begun. Saturday night, automobiles whisked around over the Vermont Square tract, which has just been opened, and over that of the Los Angeles Investment Company, on which a large number of houses have been built. A large force of men moved about stealthily in the darkness and when the first rays of morning light appeared little mounds of dirt, at regular intervals, indicated where holes had been dug for the planting of poles.

"SOMETHING DOING."

It had been many months since the construction gangs of either of the lighting companies had been on duty on Sunday and when the men received orders to "get busy" at 7 o'clock, yesterday morning, they knew there was "something doing." Every one of them was on edge for the fray and went to work with zest. The feeling of tension in the atmosphere was exhilarating and the crowd of spectators momentarily augmented as the news spread, also stimulated to energy.

At 9 o'clock, wagons loaded with poles rolled into sight. While operations covered a district comprising several hundred acres, the excitement was most intense on the Vermont tract at Western avenue and Forty-eighth street. There the Edison men had dug a row of holes in an alley that extended through the tract and the Los Angeles concern's crew had also pierced this earth for a short distance along the same line.

When W. A. Raymaker, superintendent of construction of the Edison company marshaled his thirty-eight men to plant the first pole on the edge of Western avenue, City Foreman Dewey of the Los Angeles company was directing a large gang of men several blocks away.

COME ON A RUN.

"Run down there and tell the boss to come up here quick. There's something doing!" shouted Dewey's assistant, R. P. Pallett, to one of his men. Away went the messenger scurrying across and in a few minutes forty men, with pikes, shovels and other implements, were seen coming on a run, headed by the "boss."

The wagons belonging to both companies had, in the meantime driven up and while some of the men unloaded the poles others prepared to raise the big sticks. The first holes dug by the rivals were only five feet apart, and in handling the poles, the respective crews were working elbow to elbow.

The excitement increased. It was a race for occupation of the disputed alley, and upon the result might hinge business amounting to thousands of dollars. Both gangs worked feverishly.

GANGS NERVOUS.

"Yo, heave!" shouted the head of one, not merrily, but earnestly. "Steady there! Altogether now!" called the boss of the other. The men were nervous. Occasionally members of one gang bumped into those of another. "Hey, there! Get out of this!" "Keep on your own side. We'll beat you to it," "You're forty minutes late," were heard, as well as remarks more forcible.

When it came to the raising of the poles the Edison men were the more nervous, and did not get hold of the wood readily with their pikes. Their rivals gained an advantage (so it seemed to the crowd,) and had their sticks upright while the Edison men were still tugging.

When the holes had been filled with earth and tamped, both sides claimed

GIVE THANKS.

MAY BREAK DEADLOCK.

Illinois Legislators Expected to Act Soon.

Hope to Elect Congressman Lorimer This Week.

Democrats Standing Ready to Lend Their Aid.

[BY DIRECT WIRE TO THE TIMES.]

CHICAGO, May 23.—[Exclusive Dispatch.] A United States Senator will be elected this week or this Legislature will remain in session until one is elected. This is the latest tip from the inner circle of Republican leaders.

From the same source also emanates the prophecy that the new Senator will be Congressman Lorimer.

This information came to the surface tonight, at Springfield and Chicago, after a series of conferences, and long-distance interchange of confidences over the telephone.

The understanding among Republican politicians is that Lorimer, after a day of checking up the situation with the leaders of all the interests friendly to him is able to count enough votes to make him Senator. According to this line of information it is all framed up to land him in the job on Tuesday next with the aid of Democratic votes.

The way has been paved for gracefully handing the Congressman a full working complement of votes from the Democratic side. Minority members have in their possession dozens of letters from constituents begging them to vote for any man, even a Republican, for Senator, and thereby aid in breaking the nerve-racking deadlock.

It is proposed to start the fireworks at the joint session of the Senate and House on Tuesday, and if all is propitious the Legislature and public may be favored with the reading of some of these letters by Democratic members, as they rise to explain their votes.

Then, if nothing disturbing happens, Congressman Lorimer will receive all the votes that have been lined up for him.

DICKINSON LITTLE BETTER.

Secretary Returns to Washington from Tour of Inspection, But Slightly Improved in Health.

[ASSOCIATED PRESS NIGHT REPORT.]

WASHINGTON, May 23.—Weak from the effects of his illness which compelled him to cut short his trip, Secretary Dickinson stepped ashore from the government yacht Mayflower, at the Washington navy yard this afternoon, after a tour of inspection of the Panama Canal. Until yesterday Mr. Dickinson had not left his berth since the Mayflower sailed from Havana. The Secretary was first chills, and while showing signs of his illness, appeared to be improved.

Mr. Dickinson expressed pleasure at the progress in the construction of the Panama Canal, but when asked regarding conditions in Cuba, he replied:

"I only saw Cuba through a port hole."

TARIFF ONLY.

COTTONSEED "OLIVE" OIL.

[ASSOCIATED PRESS NIGHT REPORT.]

WASHINGTON, May 23.—The Senate programme for this week includes nothing but the tariff, and there is no prospect of any of that spice which is said to be the result of variety. Night sessions are probable.

No plan of operation has been outlined beyond that of hammering away at the various schedules as persistently as possible.

This is Senator Aldrich's programme, and nothing but set speeches or strong opposition by other Senators will cause him to deviate from it.

The lumber schedule will continue to receive attention.

With the lumber paragraphs disposed of, the Finance Committee will undertake to have the Senate gather up the odds and ends of the tariff bill which have been passed over, with a view to cleaning up as much of the measure as possible before the cotton and woolen schedules are reached, on which there will be much discussion and sharp conflict.

Senator Aldrich will continue to urge the fixing of a day for a final vote on the bill.

The ultimate consumer, the scapegoat of the tariff discussion in Congress, is being enlightened on many questions through the publication of facts brought out in debate.

Some of the knowledge brings no joy to the heart of the "ultimate consumer," for he finds in many instances he has been deceived.

Apropos of the Senate discussion regarding the necessity for protecting the American cottonseed oil industry, Special Agent Julian L. Brode of the Department of Commerce and Labor has sent information from Marseilles that the American "ultimate consumer" has been using his own cottonseed oil for his salad dressing in the belief that it was "pure olive oil" from France.

Mr. Brode adds, in a kindly spirit, that the French pure-food law and the short crop of olives are going to boost the price of real olive oil for the "ultimate consumer."

Those southern Senators who opposed a duty on cottonseed contended the industry needed no protection, on the ground that there was no competition abroad, but Mr. Brode gives a list of oils which he claims compete with the American oil.

France imports about one-fifth of the cottonseed oil shipped out of the United States, and Marseilles is the largest vegetable oil producer in the world, having forty-five mills, which crush about 465,000 tons of seed annually, in addition to the large amount of oil which is shipped there.

"Most of the cottonseed oil is mixed with other oils—olive, peanut, sesame—and sold as 'table oil,'" writes Mr. Brode.

AUTO RECOVERED.

SACRAMENTO, May 23.—[Exclusive Dispatch.] The automobile belonging to W. T. White, which was stolen from in front of the Orpheum Theater, Oakland, Friday, was found by the police on Ninth street, where it had been deserted since an early hour this morning. The machine, which is a valuable six-cylinder Winton, was undamaged.

The police have under arrest a man whom they think responsible for a large number of automobile thefts throughout the State, and it is believed that he has a partner who took the Keyes machine from its garage here more than three weeks ago. The name of the suspect is carefully guarded.

DOWIEITES MAY MOVE.

[BY DIRECT WIRE TO THE TIMES.]

CHICAGO, May 23.—[Exclusive Dispatch.] While Overseer Wilbur Glenn Voliva today declined to admit that he and his followers of the split Dowie Church in Zion City are contemplating the purchase of a 40,000-acre tract at Edmonton, Alberta, it is declared on good authority that negotiations for the purchase are under way. Coincident with the rumored plan to found a permanent colony in the Canadian Northwest, it is pointed out that the factional fight in Zion City has become acute. While Overseer Voliva has a strong following, Overseer Lewis, named in the will of the late John Alexander Dowie as the "lawful successor" as head of the Christian Catholic church, has succeeded in making things extremely lively. At the recent election, each faction elected a Mayor and a full city ticket, including Aldermen. It is now up to the Lake county courts to decide which candidates shall be officially seated.

BARONESS IN POORHOUSE.

[BY DIRECT WIRE TO THE TIMES.]

PITTSBURGH (Pa.) May 23.—[Exclusive Dispatch.] Baroness L. F. Lagerfelt, who in her youth was universally admired as "the lovely Molly Doty" of Steubenville, O., whose father, Calvin B. Doty, was one of the wealthiest men of this section, was admitted to the poorhouse at Altenhein, W. Va., at her own request yesterday. Miss Doty married Baron L. Frederick Lagerfelt, scion of a fine, old, noble Swedish family, Vice-Consul of Sweden here, in St. Paul's Church, Steubenville, December 12, 1884. Five years afterwards Baron Lagerfelt disappeared, an ingrate to his generous father-in-law and, worse, it is alleged, a forger. Three years later his broken-hearted wife divorced him. It is not known how the Baroness exhausted her resources. She spent her last penny three weeks ago. Friends of her youth found her starving in a wretched room. Proud still, she refused to occupy the quarters they provided for her and applied for admission to the almshouse.

ST. LOUIS (Mo.) May 23.—[Exclusive Dispatch.] John Berry, the veteran balloonist and inventor, ascended from here at 12:15 o'clock this afternoon in the balloon Dauntless, accompanied by H. E. Honeywell, the aëronaut, to make his final trip to qualify as a pilot so he can enter the balloon races from Indianapolis. A carrier pigeon first brought the news that Berry and Honeywell landed safely in the Dauntless on the Chambers farm, near Pattonville, St. Louis county, Missouri, about sixteen miles from this city. The message, signed by Berry, said the trip was in every way successful, and that as a result, Berry will race with his balloon from Indianapolis. On account of the wind's small velocity Honeywell and Berry deemed it unsafe to attempt to cross the Mississippi River. After landing with Honeywell, Harry Grover, a well-known automobile enthusiast, and a Globe Democrat reporter. After sailing 1000 feet high for about a mile, Berry made the second landing and then Honeywell and Constable John Mueller got in the basket and went up the third time. Later, Berry and Honeywell took six country boys up in the balloon.

NIGHT RIDERS OUT AGAIN.

[BY DIRECT WIRE TO THE TIMES.]

LEXINGTON (Ky.) May 23.—[Exclusive Dispatch.] With the "nightrider" spirit again much in evidence throughout Kentucky, the State will undoubtedly be put to heavy expense again this year to quell the disorders in the tobacco districts, as Gov. Willson has said he will use the power in the State militia to guarantee the farmers the safety of their property. During the past week, many warning notices have been received by growers and much damage has been done to plant beds, but in each instance it has been members of the various organizations who were damaged, while last year it was chiefly the anti-association members who were burned out and bodily harmed. With this spirit of apparent retaliation it is the belief of the State officials that even a greater amount of damage will be done this year than last, and it is likely that troops will be placed in the field at an early date.

ALWAYS LEADS THE WORLD.

Climate, rapid business development, marvelous growth in population and the remarkable advertising volume of The Times are elements which have made Los Angeles the most talked of city in America; and not the least of them has been the record of The Times in constantly printing more paid advertising than any other newspaper in the world.

Each month for a number of years the actual figures for the leading papers in the largest city have been carefully compiled and printed in The Times. The statement always shows this journal leading by hundreds of columns.

Following are the detailed figures for April, 1909, showing The Times with an aggregate of 4415 columns for the month, being almost 1000 columns more than the Chicago Tribune or the New York World printed.

RAILROAD RECORD.

GEORGIA LINE IS TIED FAST.

No Train Moves on the Main Line Divisions.

Reckless Mobs Are Ready to Beat Strike-breakers.

General Manager Lays Blame on Gov. Smith.

[BY DIRECT WIRE TO THE TIMES.]

ATLANTA (Ga.) May 23.—[Exclusive Dispatch.] The Georgia Railroad is completely tied up today. On the main line not a single train was run.

The branch line's only two trains were run, but for very short distances. Acting under advices from First Assistant Grand Chief of the Brotherhood of Locomotive Engineers, the engineers today did not report at the yards on account of the danger from reckless mobs along the line, anxious to beat and injure the strike-breaking firemen and the negro firemen, over whom the strike started.

Last night General Manager Scott of the Georgia Railroad sent a telegram to Gov. Hoke Smith, putting the blame on the Governor, asserting his failure to act was responsible for the condition of affairs.

Gov. Smith made a dignified answer today, showing that all he could do would be to order out troops, and in that case engineers and firemen would be made targets of marksmen, scattered through the woods, and death and anarchy would result. Atty.-Gen. Hart, after conferences with both sides today, made reports to the Governor, in which he proposed that each side chose three Georgians and these six, with Manager Scott of the Georgia and Second Vice-President Ball of the striking firemen, should arbitrate the matter.

This plan will be submitted to Scott and Ball. It is rumored in Atlanta that Scott has left for Louisville, Ky., to confer with Milton Smith of the Louisville and Nashville, which operates the Georgia road under lease. Thirty strike-breakers are in Atlanta prepared to take out trains.

NINE GREAT SERVICES.

General Assembly of Presbyterian Church Listens to New Moderator's Annual Sermon.

[ASSOCIATED PRESS NIGHT REPORT.]

DENVER, May 23.—Nine great services of a devotional character marked the activities today attending the annual gathering of the General Assembly of the Presbyterian church.

The largest of these was the morning meeting in Central Presbyterian Church, at which Dr. James M. Barkley, the moderator, delivered his annual sermon to the assembly. He reviewed at length the work of the church throughout the world.

Rain marred the great parade planned for the Sunday-school children. A popular meeting in behalf of home and foreign missions was held in Central Church in the afternoon, and in the Denver Auditorium. Rev. Charles Stetzle of New York, addressed several thousand laboring men on the subject of labor conditions over the United States. Mr Stetzle is chairman of the department of church and labor.

There were five popular meetings tonight in as many different churches in behalf of various movements.

TO REOPEN VULTURE MINE.

Boston and Canadian Capitalists Hard at Work Now That Litigation Has Ended.

[BY DIRECT WIRE TO THE TIMES.]

BOSTON, May 23.—[Exclusive Dispatch.] Boston capitalists are backing Spencer W. Hutchinson, a Boston engineer, in the promotion of a new gold mining flotation in the Vulture property of Arizona, located at Wickenberg, Maricopa county. Canadian capitalists also are associated.

Titles have been closed after years of litigation. More than $16,000,000 has already been taken out of this mine to a depth of 400 feet before it was closed down by litigation. The property is equipped with an eighty-ton stamp mill and 1000-ton cyanide mill. The mine has already been pumped out and development work started. On the 400-foot-level vein, 30 feet wide, ore averaging $40 per ton in gold and silver has been opened. The property is capitalized for $3,000,000, in $5 shares.

LAWYER SHOOTS WIDOW.

LIMA (O.) May 23.—Mrs. Maud Dilts, a young widow, was shot tonight by John Beal, a well-known lawyer. The lawyer rapped on the door of the house for admittance. When Mrs. Dilts appeared he began firing. At midnight the police were hot on the lawyer's trail, and already had exchanged shots with him.

KILL AND LOOT.

OBOYAN (Russia) May 23.—A band of desperadoes today attacked a government wine shop. They killed five persons and mortally wounded the keeper. After pillaging the shop they escaped.

Drink Arrowhead Spring Water and be healthy and happy.

RACKET AT FUNERAL.

Mourners Fall Through Trapdoor in Floor Onto Dinner Table.

[BY DIRECT WIRE TO THE TIMES.]

HAMBURG (Pa.) May 23.—[Exclusive Dispatch.] Three women and a boy plunged through the floor of a second-story room in the home of William Kauffman in Center township, this afternoon, and fell on the dining-room table below. The table was surrounded by guests.

One of the diners, Mrs. Elias Balthaser, was bending over the table at the time, and one of the women fell on her neck, causing probably fatal injuries. Kauffman's little daughter was buried this afternoon, and the funeral party returned to his house for dinner. Pastor D. P. Derberch and a dozen others were gathered around the table, which was piled high with viands, and a number of women mourners were assembled upstairs.

There was an old trapdoor in the dining-room ceiling, and the weight of some of the portly women caused it to give way. Those who fell through were Mrs. Jacob Miller, Mrs. Lewis Schwoyer and a small boy. They were little injured, though their clothes were torn and the tableware they broke filled two large clothes baskets.

ROBBERS STRIP HIM NAKED.

Chicago Footpads Take Everything Victim Has and Leave Him Shivering in Night Air.

[BY DIRECT WIRE TO THE TIMES.]

CHICAGO, May 23.—[Exclusive Dispatch.] Edward A. Watson would have gone home in a barrel last night if he could have found one. As it was, the long-tailed coat of a friendly policeman saved late night strollers from being too badly shocked.

At the points of guns, Watson handed over $25, two knives, a watch and a ring. Three men surrounded him at the corner of Michigan avenue and Washington street.

One robber needed a coat and vest, another had no shoes and the third seemed to need nearly everything. They all took what they wanted and left Watson covered only by the cold night air.

As the robbers fled a policeman hove in sight and masked the back-to-nature man in the folds of his coat. At the police station Mr. Watson borrowed a pair of very corpulent trousers from another policeman, a coat from a lanky guard, a pair of shoes in which his feet rattled and a nickel car fare to get to his home.

Graduation Plans Spoiled Because Principal Thrashed Senior, Who Then Quit School.

[BY DIRECT WIRE TO THE TIMES.]

GRANT'S PASS, May 23.—[Exclusive Dispatch.] Grant's Pass High School graduates are "on strike," with the result that class-day exercises, which should have occurred last night, were called off.

Trouble has been brewing for some time in school and as no settlement was reached it has practically spoiled graduation exercises. It started when Prof. Mickle, principal, thrashed Roubaux Ritchie, one of the graduating class members. Ritchie left school and refused to return to his classes or to take part in the graduating exercises. He was a principal character in the class-day play, which was to have been part of the exercises last night. His classmates sympathized with him and for a time it appeared as if there would be no graduating class.

Both Prof. Turner, city superintendent, and Prof. Mickle of the High School are under arrest charged with assault and battery on young Ritchie. Their case is set for Monday. Unless the matter is satisfactorily settled it may result in the calling off of the graduating exercises set for next week.

IMPERISHABLE IS INVITATION.

Bid to President to Be Cut on Copper Plate.

Citizens of Douglas Want to See Mr. Taft.

Former Supervisor Indicted on Three Counts.

[SPECIAL CORRESPONDENCE OF THE TIMES.]

BISBEE (Ariz.) May 21.—Douglas will send to President Taft an invitation to visit that city on his western trip, and the invitation will be one that will cause him to sit up and take notice. For it will be engraved upon a beautiful plate of polished copper. The copper will be metal that has been mined in Bisbee and smelted in Douglas. The idea proceeds from W. M. Adamson and C. O. Ellis, but has been adopted enthusiastically by the entire community.

Francisco Tamas, aged 24, was caught yesterday between the bumpers of two gravel cars at Stein's Pass and so injured that he died within a few minutes. The body was jammed in such manner between the draw bars that a locomotive had to be brought up to pull the cars apart and release the corpse.

Al Nogales are being laid 12,000 feet of new water mains, to supply outlying additions to the city. A new reservoir of 800,000 gallons capacity is about complete.

PLEADS GUILTY.

Charles T. McGlone, former Supervisor of the Chiricahua national forest, with headquarters at Douglas, has been indicted on three counts of embezzlement while in the government service. He has pleaded guilty to one of the indictments.

Joseph Welken has secured judgment against the El Paso and Southwestern Railroad Company for $9000. In July, 1908, while employed as a switchman, he lost his right arm through alleged carelessness on the part of agents of the defendant company.

C. E. Ahlberg, employed at the Copper Queen smelter, was killed last Friday at Douglas, under the wheels of an electric car, which he was unable to see on account of a raging dust storm.

W. H. Holland, an employe of the Calumet and Arizona Company at Bisbee, has disappeared without drawing his pay. Friends fear foul play.

The Greek Catholics of Bisbee are planning for a new church, to cost $15,000.

Much better fire protection is to be afforded Bisbee by the building of a reservoir, with capacity of 2,000,000 gallons, to be placed 200 feet above the new part of the business section.

R. C. Stanford has resigned as Court Commissioner, and will return to his home in Phoenix, where he has entered into partnership with Thomas Armstrong, taking the place vacated by E. W. Lewis, who has just been confirmed as one of the Associate Justices of the Arizona Supreme Court.

A. H. Hilderbran has been named manager for the American Shoe Company of Bisbee and for its main owner, T. A. Hopkins.

The current term of the District Court at Tombstone has been the most important ever known to the county. The principal case tried was that against Magon, Villareal and Rivera, accused of violation of the neutrality laws in organizing a military expedition to invade a friendly nation. Judge Doan has pronounced a sentence of eighteen months' imprisonment for each of the defendants.

W. J. Eddleman, late president of the First National Bank of Bisbee, and J. H. Nolan, the bank's cashier, have been indicted for false entries and embezzlement, developed after the failure of the institution. There are four charges against Eddleman.

BIG REALTY DEAL.

One Hundred and Twenty-five Thousand Acres of New Mexico Land Changes Hands.

[SPECIAL CORRESPONDENCE OF THE TIMES.]

SANTA FE (N. M.) May 20.—One of the biggest land deals to be consummated in New Mexico in several months, was closed this week when the firm of Grose, Kelly & Co. of East Las Vegas, purchased the interest of ex-Delegate to Congress Thos. B. Citron of this city in the Beck land grant in Guadalupe county. The transaction involved 125,000 acres, and the price paid is said to have been in the neighborhood of $500,000.

The Beck grant comprises some of the finest agricultural land in the Territory. Eighty per cent. of its acreage, which totals about 300,000 acres, is said to be adapted to farming. It is the purpose of the new owners to either sell the entire grant to an eastern syndicate, or failing in this, they will divide it into small tracts and colonize it. All the public domain surrounding the grant has been taken up and settled by homesteaders. Last year, notwithstanding it was a poor season for crops of every description in New Mexico, these new settlers succeeded in raising forty bushels of corn to the acre and other crops in proportion.

The grant is situated seven miles north of the town of Santa Rosa. Within one hundred yards of its southern boundary and almost due north of Santa Rosa, a syndicate of capitalists of Bisbee, Arizona, is drilling for oil and gas. This well is now down between 70 and 800 feet, and the surface rock contributes 20 per cent. of crude petroleum, and there also are indications of natural gas.

TO GET SON TOMORROW.—

Father-in-Law Will Return Young Eldridge Shaw to Father—Mrs. Shaw in Hiding.

[BY DIRECT WIRE TO THE TIMES.]

BOSTON, May 23.—[Exclusive Dispatch.] State Senator James F. Shaw was yesterday informed by counsel that on Monday he would recover his son from H. Fisher Eldridge, Portsmouth millionaire, Mrs. Shaw's father. The transfer will be made in accordance with an agreement between Shaw and Eldridge, made before the latter started to California to help Mrs. Shaw.

Mrs. Shaw is hiding in Boston to evade service of papers in her husband's divorce suit. The latter's petition was filed here Friday and names five places where Mrs. Shaw had improper relations with Shaw's chauffeur, H. Lino Marble. Hearing on the question of the custody of the child was set for May 25.

CHALLENGES ALL WOMEN.

Feminine Angler Eager to Meet Any of Her Sex With Rod.

[BY DIRECT WIRE TO THE TIMES.]

RENO (Nev.) May 22.—[Exclusive Dispatch.] A challenge to feminine trout anglers throughout the country is issued by Miss Sarah Burgess of Lovelock, Nev.

Friends of Miss Burgess also offer to back her with a goodly side bet. Miss Burgess in a recent fishing match against men competitors caught 125 trout in three hours. Her success as an angler is not due to luck, as the young woman has several other records for successful fishing. The fair angler is a Nevada-born young woman, and has always possessed a tendency toward anything in the line of fishing.

SURPRISE FOR SOME ONE.

JOLT COMING IN CALHOUN TRIAL.

SENSATIONS PROMISED FOR THE CURRENT WEEK.

Will Add to Alleged Revelations of Conspiracies, Plots and Counterplots, Reading Like Yellow-Backed Dime Novels, Made in Court During Last Six Days.

[ASSOCIATED PRESS NIGHT REPORT.]

SAN FRANCISCO, May 23.—Revelations of alleged conspiracies in the San Francisco bribery-graft cases, plots and counterplots, double-dealing and "diamond-cut-diamond" methods of opposing detectives in the obtaining of evidence, that read like a page from "Old Sleuth" or "Nick Carter;" accusations of perjury by attorneys for the defense, charges that efforts were made to bribe witnesses, reference to the dynamiting of the home of the prosecution's star witness; and dramatic situations when half a dozen belligerent lawyers were on their feet at the same time, and spectators held their breath with expectancy, formed a sensational chapter last week in the trial of Patrick Calhoun, president of the United Railway. There is promise of still further sensations when the case is resumed tomorrow morning.

The trial, which is nearing the sixth month of its progress, has been productive of more sensational testimony than any of the bribery-graft cases tried since the fall of 1906. It promises to become the longest criminal trial in the history of the West, perhaps the longest ever held in the United States.

With practically unlimited financial backing behind prosecution and defense, the case has been fought, not only since January 12, the date when the work of empaneling a jury began, but according to testimony given last week, detectives for the two sides, began to match wits in preparation as far back as the spring of 1907, when John Helms, the former United States secret service agent, so he declared, under direction of the defendant, organized a "flying squadron" of detectives on motorcycles to shadow William J. Burns, head of the secret service forces of the prosecution.

When the trial is resumed tomorrow, Judge William P. Lawlor will be called upon to decide whether or not he has authority, in defiance of two restraining orders of other courts of similar jurisdiction, to break the seals on a package alleged to contain documents stolen from Burns's office and found in the safe of William M. Abbott, general attorney for the United Railroads, in a raid under a search warrant on the legal offices of the street railway corporation.

These documents were taken by one of Burns's agents, who had access to them, and who, according to Helms' testimony, was in the pay of the United Railroads, to Helms, who said he turned them over to Abbott.

Helms, who, according to his own testimony later entered the employ of Burns and for a time was receiving $200 a month from the United Railroads and $10 a day and expenses from the prosecution, will be recalled to the stand to identify the documents should Judge Lawlor hold that he can lawfully disregard the enjoining orders of two other Superior judges, and place the papers in evidence. Helms will be followed by other detectives, who he testified, were present when efforts were made to dissuade him from appearing as a witness in the case for the prosecution.

Foundation also was laid by Heney, to make inquiry into the dynamiting last spring of the home of James L. Gallagher, the star witness for the prosecution in all the bribery-graft cases.

With the new turn in the case, it is doubtful whether argument will be reached before some time next week even if the defense should not offer any evidence.

So crowded has been the courtroom the past week that the six bluecoats and dozen detectives and bodyguards on duty will be increased by a still stronger detail of police in uniform and plain clothes.

TO BREAK SQUAW MAN'S WILL.

Half-breed Children of Desire St. Dennis Seek to Wrest His Estate from His Widow.

[BY DIRECT WIRE TO THE TIMES.]

PENDLETON (Or.) May 23.—[Exclusive Dispatch.] The half-breed children of Desire St. Dennis, the "squaw man" and well-known farmer of the Umatilla reservation, are about to contest the will of their father, in which they were cut off with $1 each. St. Dennis left an estate of $20,000, bequeathing practically all of it to his fourth wife, a white woman, to whom he was married but a few months before his death.

St. Dennis's first three wives were wards of the Umatilla reservation, and nearly all of his holdings were acquired through these alliances. As the title to the property has not yet passed from the government, legal advisors of the children are confident they can break the will.

St. Dennis's fourth wife was a nurse in the Walla Walla Hospital. She was his third wife's attendant during her illness, and sought to comfort the bereaved husband by becoming his bride within a week after the death of her predecessor.

Ornamental Bell to Be Raised in San Jose.

Work of Santa Clara Woman's Club Members.

Other to Be Erected Along Historic Roadway.

[BY DIRECT WIRE TO THE TIMES.]

SAN JOSE, May 23.—[Exclusive Dispatch.] Tomorrow afternoon, under the auspices of the historic land mark department of the Santa Clara Woman's Club, the first bell of many, marking the course of El Camino Real, will be erected at Morris street and the Alameda.

The erection of the bell is made possible by the efforts of Mrs. Alice Hart of Santa Clara, who has devoted considerable time to securing funds for its purchase. It is reported that nearly enough money to pay the cost of erecting a second bell has been secured, and that a third has been donated by L. E. Hanchett of the San José and Santa Clara Railroad Company.

The bell signpost is of unique pattern and will be placed on a substantial four-foot base. The land upon which it will stand is county property, and an effort is being put forth to have the Board of Supervisors provide for parking and curbing a space about the post. The ambition of the promoters of the project is to have the entire distance of El Camino Real marked with these posts.

Father Zathrian, a Franciscan of Watsonville, will officiate at the placing of the monument tomorrow. Rev. R. A. Gleeson, president of the Santa Clara College, will preside.

IRRIGATION JUNKET.

Senate Committee to Visit Many Reclamation Projects and Pick up Points for Home Use.

[BY DIRECT WIRE TO THE TIMES.]

SAN FRANCISCO, May 23.—[Exclusive Dispatch.] The Senate Committee on Irrigation is to make a tour and personal inspection of various reclamation projects during September and October, arriving in San Francisco October 15, and spending the following day in this city. The communities using water from government works in Idaho, Wyoming, Colorado, Washington, Utah, Nevada and Arizona will be visited, and at each locality representatives of the water users will present to the committee such suggestions for the betterment of the law and the service as they may think proper, and will also be prepared to answer questions which may be put to them by members of the committee.

From this city the Senators will go south by the Coast line to Los Angeles, afterwards stopping at Yuma, Phoenix and El Paso, as well as inspecting the Roosevelt dam.

Detailed instructions have been mailed to the various water users' associations in the reclamation districts as to how to prepare their reports, and suggestions for presentation before the committee and a series of questions have been sent to be answered.

The reason for this is given as the fact that the committee will have but one day to stay in each of the many places to be inspected, and time will be valuable.

OPEN WAR ON "FRATS."

School Authorities of Portland to Enforce New Law Against Student Societies.

[BY DIRECT WIRE TO THE TIMES.]

PORTLAND (Or.) May 23.—[Exclusive Dispatch.] The school authorities of Portland declare they will enforce to the letter, a State law enacted by the last Legislature and effective today, directed at high school fraternities and sororities. The new statute not only makes these organizations illegal, but makes it the duty of the city and district school boards to ferret out the societies and expel the members.

In the past fraternities have held their own against public sentiment which has persistently sought their suppression. It has been charged that the societies drew lines between wealthy and poor students and fostered snobbery and other abuses.

The frats are very strong in Portland, and have been the cause of factional strife for some time. Now the directors, who have tolerated them in the past, assert that active steps will be taken to eliminate them. The State University and agricultural college are especially exempted by the new statute.

REED WILL FIGHT ENDED.

INSTITUTE PROSPERS.

[BY DIRECT WIRE TO THE TIMES.]

PORTLAND, May 23.—[Exclusive Dispatch.] With nearly $2,000,000 available for use, an annual income assured of not far from $100,000, and officers actively engaged in inquiry and research among leading educators for advice and suggestion concerning the educational work to be taken up, the proposed Reed Institute, as provided for under the will of the late Amanda Reed, is beginning to assume definite form.

In a statement issued yesterday from the office of Dr. T. L. Eliot, president of the Reed Institute, it is shown that rapid progress has been made since litigation in the estate ceased, and that the establishment of the institute probably will have been accomplished by another year.

Mrs. Reed was the widow of S. G. Reed, multi-millionaire traffic magnate of Oregon. The latter years of her life were spent at Pasadena, where she died. Her heirs contested the bequest, but were defeated in court.

DIES BEFORE PARDONED.

PETITION WITH GOVERNOR.

[BY DIRECT WIRE TO THE TIMES.]

SACRAMENTO, May 23.—[Exclusive Dispatch.] A few hours after his petition for pardon had been presented to Gov. Gillett yesterday, James F. Louk died at Folsom prison of consumption. His aged mother, Mrs. Olive Louk, is dying at Santa Rosa. The hope that her son, the only black sheep of the family, would reach her in time to receive her blessing has enabled her to combat death so long.

Louk was serving ten years for criminal assault, committed in Trinity county. On account of his health an application for pardon was made a week ago, but it had to go to Trinity first.

JAILED FOR DEBT.

OUT ON HABEAS CORPUS.

[BY DIRECT WIRE TO THE TIMES.]

PORTLAND, May 23.—[Exclusive Dispatch.] George H. Irwin, after being held in the county jail for a week under an ancient statute providing for imprisonment for debt, secured his release on a writ of habeas corpus in the Circuit Court yesterday. Final hearing in the matter will be had next Saturday, at which time it will be determined whether or not Irwin can be held further for neglecting and failing to pay his bills.

Recovery on a judgment of $2125 was sought by George Metzgar. Satisfaction was not secured on the judgment and Metzgar, taking advantage of a statute of 1864, demanded and secured Irwin's arrest and imprisonment as a judgment debtor Monday evening.

BIG REALTY DEAL.

HORSEMAN SELLS LAND.

[BY DIRECT WIRE TO THE TIMES.]

STOCKTON, May 23.—[Exclusive Dispatch.] Thomas H. Williams, the well-known race-horse owner, has disposed of much of his interests on Union Island, in San Joaquin county, to Col. Dan Burns. The papers were filed yesterday. About three thousand acres of the rich island land was transferred. The papers do not give the exact figure of the sale, but it is understood Burns paid $150,000. The land is very rich, has been producing large crops. There has never been an inundation there, and the returns from the crops have been unusually large each season.

IMPORTS INCREASE.

WASHINGTON, May 23.—The April statement of the Bureau of Statistics shows a marked increase in the importation of manufacturers' materials, and a decline in the exportation of food stuffs.

The fifty articles named in the import list form about two-thirds of the total value of the imports and the fifty articles named in the export list from about three-fourths of the total value of exports.

It is shown that in nearly all articles for use in manufacturing, including raw silk, hides and skins, India rubber, wool fibers, copper, lumber, raw cotton and chemicals, the imports of the month and of the accumulated months of the year are in excess of those of the corresponding period of last year; that in many of the important manufactures the figures of the present year exceed those of last year, but that in food stuffs the exports of 1909 are in most cases less in value than those of 1908.

MAY NAME HAMMOND.

WASHINGTON, May 23.—While it is impossible to secure any confirmation of the report that President Taft will tender the post of Minister to China to John Hays Hammond, it is believed here that such an offer will be made.

Whether Mr. Hammond would feel that he could leave his business interests in this country and take up his residence in Peking, without serious detriment to the former has been the subject of much speculation.

All efforts to secure some expression from the officials most likely to know whether the offer is to be made, were unavailing.

Death in the Dust.

The best medical experts of the United States and Europe announce, as a result of a long series of experiments and investigations that fully one-half of the deaths from consumption in this and other countries occur among the people who are compelled to breathe dust in its various forms. This result is announced in a bulletin of the Bureau of Labor at Washington, which deals particularly with the effects of dust on factory workmen, but adds the significant statement that the source of disease is no greater than that found in the dust of the streets.

These statistics place a new phase on the question of clean streets. It is not merely a question of personal comfort. It is a question of life and death. In the last analysis it means that city officials who fail to take proper care of the streets are morally, if not legally responsible for a good share of the deaths from pulmonary diseases, the germs of which ride in the dust.—[St.

RACE STORY OF THE HUSKS.

New Theory on the Death of Anna Poltera.

Fresh-eaten Tamales in the Slain Girl's Stomach.

One Suspect Arrested and Set Free Yesterday.

The autopsy on the body of Anna Poltera, the little girl who was outraged and murdered near Griffith Park, showed freshly-eaten tamales in her stomach. The camp found near the scene of the murder, was littered with tamale husks.

It is believed that the little victim was lured into the camp and met her fate near there; and when the cruel truth was given her, it was to still her wild cries of anguish, fear and shame.

One week after the commission of one of the most dastardly crimes in the history of the county the murderer and slasher of little Anna Poltera is still at large. He has eluded the best efforts of not only trained and keen detectives, but of many hundreds of people who have sought with feverish eagerness to obtain some little clew that might lead to his detection and punishment.

Theory after theory has been exploded. The slightest clews have been followed to a logical end. New theories have been brought up, fresh brains are applying themselves to the task, and the community is still grimly determined to continue the search until justice has been satisfied.

"Nothing new," answers the officers shortly, as they might answer, "Not guilty."

THOUSANDS SCOUR HILLS.

All of yesterday the hills about Griffith Park were covered with thousands of people, each striving as if his or her life depended upon it, to find a clew that might prove a key to the terrible mystery of little Anna's death.

It was a strange crowd, that multitude of volunteer detectives. Young and old were there, mothers who could understand what was in the heart of the mother to whom the murdered girl was more than life itself, frail girls before whom all the joys and sorrows of life still lay, young men and boys, with a feeling alone the responsibility of finding that which all sought in vain. From a distance one would have thought the people had assembled from all over the countryside for a holiday, or some national celebration, perhaps. But the truth was apparent to the most casual observer who drew near enough to see the tightly-pressed lips, or caught a glimpse of the burning eyes as they were lifted a moment from the ground to glance over the landscape, wondering if perchance the search might not be conducted more carefully in some other direction, or elsewhere else.

AVENGING GODDESS—PERHAPS.

"Oh, if I could only find him," cried a girl still in her 'teens, as she paused in her walk across the fields and impulsively clasped her hands. Slender, tall, with a face like that of a child, it seemed at first to be a dainty figure, suggestive only of thoughts of fairness and the beautiful. But there was that in her big blue eyes that told plainly that even this delicate creature would be transformed into an avenging goddess if fate had sealed the doom of Anna Poltera's slayer in her soft, white hands.

It was appalling, this crowd of men, women and children. The blood thirst was upon them, and the spirit of it was pervading. As one stood among them there came the desire to seek, to seek feverishly, with all one's faculties centered in the quest, in the hope that the foul crime might be avenged. But even this intense quest of the multitude has been of no avail. Today a new mind will be brought into play. Deputy Bert Franklin of the United States Marshal's office will take up the hunt. Thousands will wish him success.

Franklin has a theory. He is convinced that the man who killed Anna Poltera so brutally was a white man—not a Mexican. Furthermore he is satisfied that the murderer was one who knew the child and whom the child knew. He argues that it was because the child did know him, because of the knowledge that her knowing him, would make his punishment certain that he was butchered her.

WHAT THE HUSKS TELL.

The autopsy has revealed that but a short time before her death, Anna Poltera had been feasting on tamales, and further fact that the hidden camp in the brush near the scene of the crime was littered with tamale husks.

The camp was an old one. At least, it had been in use for weeks. Its veggish occupants may have seemed good friends to the girl who might have seen them time and again as she trudged along the dusty road between her home and the school three miles away. Then, with the most damnable designs in his heart, the ravisher spoke to the little girl, she welcomed him with all the innocence of childhood. He induced her into the brush, the road was too open, too dangerous, and she, poor little girl, followed to her undoing. So runs one theory.

Not only Mexicans eat tamales. The article is a common enough article of food here, much more convenient to carry to a veggman's camp than canned goods because more easily obtained and requiring less preparation. Mexicans in need will live upon them almost exclusively, but the occupant of the camp had tired of the fare and provided two new frying pans wherewith he could cook meals more to his liking. But it was tamales that Anna Poltera ate on that fatal day, and there is strong reason to believe that they were given to the child by a white man, a man whose low cunning was such that, as he lay in the brush, watching her day after day as she went to and from school, he carefully planned the deed. He took no chances on the open road. How well he succeeded, the public knows and feels all too bitterly.

SUSPECT ARRESTED.

Yesterday, a thrill ran through those who heard the day's news. A suspect had been arrested by one of Sheriff Hammel's deputies. There was no cry for lynching. The wary officers were too quick. A Mexican, whose name was subsequently learned to be Francisco Perez, was found washing a shirt in a ditch and the uncertain finger of suspicion was pointed at him. The man was hurried to the County Jail, where he was severely examined, but he gave such a good account of himself and his actions for the past week that he was released.

Detectives from the office of Chief Lehman were busy afield yesterday. "Nothing doing," they reported when they returned.

Sheriff Hammel started out on a mysterious trip at 2 o'clock yesterday afternoon. He returned at night empty handed.

But the hunt has not yet been given up. "Murder will out."

The only result of yesterday's searching for evidence was the finding of a little paper lunch box about 150 feet from the spot in which the body of the Poltera girl was found. The lunch box is supposed to have been the one she carried to school.

SAD RETURN.

OLIVER'S BODY BROUGHT HOME.

ELKS TO CONDUCT FUNERAL OF LAMENTED LAWYER.

Remains of Well-Known Los Angeles Man Who Died Suddenly in Mexico First Ever Permitted to Leave State of Chiapas—Mournful End of Pleasure Trip.

Accompanied by the widow and Mr. and Mrs. Thomas Hughes, the remains of the late Byron L. Oliver, the young Los Angeles lawyer who died suddenly on the 15th inst., in the interior of Mexico, reached here at 7 o'clock last evening and were taken to the undertaking parlors of Bresee Brothers, where the funeral services will be held at 10 o'clock Wednesday morning. Interment will be at Inglewood Cemetery and will be in charge of the local lodge of Elks, of which Mr. Oliver was a former Exalted Ruler. Rev. John L. Pitner will officiate.

Permission to bring the body to the United States was obtained only with the greatest difficulty; this is said to be the first instance in which such a favor has been extended in the State of Chiapas, in which, at La Auretra plantation, Mr. Oliver, passed away.

Mr. Oliver, with his wife and Mr. and Mrs. Hughes, left Los Angeles on April 24, on a pleasure trip to the rubber plantation of Harry L. Dike, a Los Angeles man, in the State of Chiapas. Four days were spent en route in the City of Mexico and the party reached the Dike plantation on the 9th inst., expecting to remain until about June 1.

With Mexican guides, Mr. Oliver, Mr. Hughes and others went on a deer hunt on the first Tuesday after their arrival, though Mr. Oliver had complained of a slight indisposition. He had been unable to eat for several days.

The next day Mr. Oliver complained of stomach trouble, though it appeared to be nothing serious, and he improved so much that he again went hunting on the following day, riding horseback, and succeeding in bringing down a deer.

On Friday of the same week he again was taken ill, this time so seriously that the need of medical attention was seen at once. He was taken in a spring wagon seven miles to La Auretra plantation, within one mile of the Pan-American Railroad line. At this place a physician was obtained, but, as it turned out, only one hour before death. He said at once that the patient suffered with kidney trouble, that uric acid poisoning had set in, and that there was no hope. On Saturday, at 3 o'clock p.m., Mr. Oliver died.

He was conscious to the end, and cheerful, saying to his friends that he knew he would recover.

The weather was warm and immediate decomposition of the body threatened. A telegram was sent at once, ordering an embalmer from the City of Mexico, and a special train quickly brought ice from the nearest available point, to aid in preserving the remains.

Difficulty was encountered in gaining permission for the removal of the body from the State of Chiapas. Through the Governor of that State, who was obliged to seek authority from the national government, the request finally was granted and Mrs. Oliver and Mr. and Mrs. Hughes started on the sad return journey, being obliged to make many changes of cars on the way.

The widow was accompanied to her home in South Pasadena by Miss Nellie G. Oliver, her husband's brother, and Mr. and Mrs. Harry Harrington, who had met the party at Colton. Mrs. Oliver was prostrated by the sudden blow, but she bore up well on the sad return journey.

CHILDREN FIRE CHURCH.

Want to Make Huge Altar Candle of Sacred Structure Near Cincinnati.

[BY DIRECT WIRE TO THE TIMES.]

CINCINNATI, May 23.—[Exclusive Dispatch.] A fire today in the Church of the Monastery of the Holy Cross at Mount Adams, a suburb, revealed a strange story. The church was filled with smoke and flames when Father Superior Cosmier entered, attracted by the pungent odor. Firemen were brought quickly and the flames were soon extinguished, having done about $500 damages. The most of the damage was near the splendid shrine of St. Gabriel, where the altar candles had been ignited.

This evening a member of the congregation came to Father Cosmier and told him that two of his children, aged 5 and 6, had confessed that they and some half dozen other children had set fire to the church, intending to burn the structure as a sort of huge altar candle, a grand exaggeration and emphasis of the sight they had often seen of burning candles around the altars.

There will be no prosecution.

COACHMAN NOW "GENTLEMAN."

Colored Driver Rewarded With Horses, Carriage, Home and Income by Mrs. Morris.

[BY DIRECT WIRE TO THE TIMES.]

NEW YORK, May 23.—[Exclusive Dispatch.] William Henderson, negro, for forty years the faithful coachman of the John A. Morris family at Throggs Neck, can lean back on the cushions of his own carriage now and order his own coachman to drive him along the shores of the Sound and up and down the hills of Westchester.

Such is the reward which comes when he and his wife are 70 and well enough to enjoy many a drive. Perhaps the reward, which, in addition to horses and carriages and coachman, includes a house and land and income for life, was hastened by Mrs. Morris's conclusion that the automobile is the proper carriage for the modern woman of fashion. She clung to horses for years after all her acquaintances had abandoned their landaus and Victorias for touring cars.

Finally Mrs. Morris was persuaded by her sons, Dave Morris, former president of the Automobile Club of America, and Alfred Morris, that the horseless carriage is the thing. So Henderson was retired on his pension and the boys became his. Also his assistant coachman becomes his driver.

DOG DROWNS MASTER.

HANFORD, May 23.—Robert Dunn, a painter aged 40, was drowned today in Kings River, on a picnic with his wife and children and two other families. Dunn and another picnicker started across the stream in a boat. Dunn's dog followed and in trying to board the boat capsized it.

NIPPONESE IN BREEZE.

POLICE RAID LITTLE TOKIO.

Descend on Fifteen Japanese Restaurant Places.

Arrest Half-Hundred Keepers and Waiters.

Round-up Carefully Planned for the Squads.

The police pulled off another spectacular raid last night, when they made a round-up of fifteen Japanese restaurants scattered through Little Tokio and arrested about fifty of the keepers and waiters found serving liquor in the establishments without a license.

Before midnight every one of the little brown people had furnished bail for appearance in the Police Court this morning. The proprietors provided $100 and the waiters $50 each. The latter were mostly women. The places raided are located at Nos. 131 North San Pedro street, 135 North Central avenue, 208 North San Pedro street, 433 Jackson street, 205 North San Pedro street, 226 North San Pedro street, 314 East First street, 211½ North San Pedro street, 611 North Alameda street, 510 North Alameda street, 105 North San Pedro street, 122 South San Pedro street, 340 East First street, 331 East First street and 208 North San Pedro street.

SWARM OF JAPS.

Within five minutes after the police entered on the raids the streets in Little Tokio swarmed with Japanese men and women, and while there was much excited talk, no violence was threatened against the officers. At No. 105 North San Pedro street a great crowd of Japs surged about the front entrance and in their eagerness to watch the proceedings broke down the street door. However, when the officers within advanced on the door with drawn clubs the Japs quickly dispersed.

In every one of the joints raided great quantities of liquors were found, and for three hours three police wagons were used hauling confiscated wet goods and prisoners to the Central Police Station. The liquors, which are stored in the jail cellar, amount to many hundreds of dollars. Beer and saki predominated, though many of the joints, notably the Los Angeles Nippon Club at No. 131 North San Pedro street, carried a diversity of American and Japanese liquors.

The Nippon Club, which is the most fashionable and exclusive Japanese organization of the kind in the city, is where the admiral and other officers of the Japanese fleet which visited here recently were entertained at an elaborate banquet. This club was thrown into consternation when the officers raided the rooms, as preparations were being made for a big banquet in honor of several members who are about to leave the city. The club operates under a State charter, but it had no license, not even from the government, to dispense liquor. Most of the places raided had Federal permits.

CAREFULLY PLANNED.

The raid was carefully planned by Chief of Police Dishman and Deputy City Prosecutor Seymour, who have been gathering information for ten days, and who have evidence against all the places raided prior to last night. Practically the entire night force was utilized, so as to bring about all the fifteen raids at the same minute.

None of the raiding parties knew they were to be given special work for the night until they reported for duty at 6:45 o'clock. They were given the instructions at the evening assembly by Capt. Dixon, and they left the Central Station in squads of four and five each for the respective restaurants which they were to raid.

So thorough were the plans that each squad was given a diagram plan of the building, and the names of the persons to be arrested on evidence already at hand. Each party also carried a search warrant. In charge of the fifteen squads were Capt. Dixon, Lieut. Haupt, Sergt. McDowell, Sergt. Sebastian, Sergt. Tyler, Sergt. Grogan, Sergt. Kriege, Sergt. Long and Officers Hollowell, Hilf, Schofield, Lennox, Lennon, Beals and D. T. Murphy. City Prosecutor Guy Eddie and Deputy Seymour made rounds of the raided places later.

DRAGGED FROM CLOSETS.

As the squads approached the restaurants patrolmen were detailed to guard all the exits to prevent escapes and the places were then entered by the commanders. In nearly every place men and women were dragged from closets, under beds, and other places where they attempted to conceal themselves.

At the Police Station, after the wagons began to arrive, Japs stood about in herds, and there was much scrambling by leaders of the colony to procure bail money. The treasurer of a trust fund brought $800 to the jail in a lump to be applied for the release of his countrymen.

In every place raided the police found beer and other drinks being served, and bottles and glasses on tables in rooms. About thirty places have been known to the police where drinks were being illegally sold, but evidence was secured against only the fifteen raided last night. Against these places the Chief says they have sufficient evidence to convict.

STAB LIKELY FATAL.

Fight at Place on Buena Vista Street Follows Quarrel Over Woman, Three Arrests.

S. C. Carmona, of No. 621 Buena Vista street was fatally stabbed in the abdomen late yesterday afternoon. He and Marcilian Ramirez engaged in a fight which followed a quarrel over a woman. The stabbing took place in the home of Marta Gado of No. 618½, who was the cause of it.

It appears that both Carmona and Ramirez were paying attentions to the Gado woman and both called at her home yesterday afternoon. Ramirez was accompanied by Tiadora Lara. It is alleged that Carmona was received with the greater friendliness, which angered Ramirez, and he began to berate the woman. Carmona interfered when Ramirez suddenly drew a long knife, stabbed his rival and with the bloody blade in hand ran into the street.

Ramirez was arrested later by Patrolman Leon who also took Lara and the other woman into custody. The knife thrust opened a wound six inches long in Carmona's abdomen and punctured the intestines twice. Receiving Hospital surgeons who treated him hold out little hope for his recovery.

CUT OUT LOVER'S DANCE.

Apache Braves Decide to Eliminate Ancient Tribal Ceremonial in Woman's Honor.

[BY DIRECT WIRE TO THE TIMES.]

FORT SILL (Okla.) May 23.—[Exclusive Dispatch.] Apaches who long followed in their late Chief Geronomo's path are about to eliminate from that tribe's ancient custom the lover's dance, always given in honor of an Apache squaw when she enters womanhood. This week Eliza, an Apache sixteen-year-old maiden, daughter of Cooney, a Federal scout of note and near relative of the recently-selected Chief Asa Deklugie, and a Christian, is to have her "coming out" party at Fort Sill, near Asa's camp.

Her father is planning a "passover" imitation of the Jewish religion feast, at which he proposes to give the most elaborate spread ever set before the Apache prisoners of war, and dispense with the "lovers" dance. The anti-Christian Apaches declare they will have the dance, and the outcome is watched with interest.

ITALY'S QUEEN VERY ILL.

MILAN, May 23.—[Exclusive Dispatch.] Much anxiety is felt concerning Queen Margherita's health. For fifty-three days she has been confined to her bed by a mysterious swelling of the muscles of her neck, which causes unceasing and excruciating pain, despite frequent injections of morphine. Specialists diagnose the malady as a species of tetanus rarely met with, and suppose it arises out of one cold upon another contracted during the long high-speed motoring excursions. The physicians take turns in watching at the bedside throughout the night.

SUES FOR ARREST.

RENO (Nev.) May 23.—[Exclusive Dispatch.] Claiming that his arrest injured his reputation as a mining expert, William L. Mackay yesterday filed suit in the district court at Goldfield against the Frances Mohawk Mining and Leasing Company, D. MacKenzies and Lillian E. Goodberlet, secretary of the company, for $100,000 damages.

Mackay was recently jailed on a charge that he had secured upward of $3000 from the Frances Mohawk Company and from the Curtis Brothers operating a sub-lease. This suit was dismissed upon the motion of those who had caused Mackay's arrest. Mackay recites his experiences in detail, including ten hours in jail, and his furnishing of a $3250 bond.

LIGHTNING HAVOC.

RENO (Nev.) May 23.—[Exclusive Dispatch.] During a fierce electrical storm that raged in the Pine Nut section, lightning struck a large tree near the Anderson ranch at Gardnerville, owned by A. Glock. Some of the flying pieces were hurled through the windows of the house, completely demolishing them. Mrs. A. Glock and Miss Josephine Roush were in the house. Mrs. Glock was struck by the lightning and one of her legs was paralyzed for several hours.

MONSTERS ARRIVE.

SACRAMENTO, May 23.—[Exclusive Dispatch.] The two largest locomotives in the world arrived here today, to be used on the steep grades on the Shasta division of the Southern Pacific. New turn-tables will be constructed especially for these engines, on account of their extreme length. Three common engines were used to drag the monsters into the city. The gigantic pair are now in the machine shops to be overhauled and made ready for immediate use.

ORDER HUNDRED ENGINES.

DUNKIRK (N. Y.) May 23.—It is reported that the Union Pacific Railroad has placed an order for 100 engines with the American Locomotive Company, and that they will be built at the Schnectady and Brooks plants.

SPECTACULAR.

WIRES A FIRE, PERIL IN AIR.

"Dare-devil" Aeronaut Has Miss from Death.

On High-Tension Circuits Parachute Lands.

Large Part of City Cut Off from Illumination.

With currents of 15,000 volts of electricity discharging in blinding flashes through his parachute, "Dare Devil" Colby, the Chutes Park aëronaut, narrowly escaped electrocution yesterday afternoon. When the big parachute lit on the heavy cables of the Edison Electric Company at Sixteenth and Maple avenue, it short-circuited seven wires, and the awful force melted the heavy copper strands as if they were made of twine.

By a narrow margin, Colby escaped direct contact with the deadly wires and held to the wooden handle of his apparatus until help arrived. Ropes were flung over a set of telephone wires which were parallel to the power cables and he managed to scramble to the ground without a burn or scratch.

Last week, Sunday, Colby had another narrow escape when his balloon caught fire before he was ready to make a descent. He hastily cast off the parachute and, grasping it with both hands, managed to alight in safety.

The substation of the Edison Company is on Pedro street. From here big cables carry 15,000 volts of "juice" to the southwest part of Boyle Heights. Every precaution is taken against accident, and a man could reach the big wires in hardly any other way than from a balloon or parachute.

BIG DISTRICT CUT OFF.

When the giant umbrella spread over the wires, the current began to play along its steel ribs and in an instant the whole section of cables was shattering with blue flames. The parachute was burned to a tangled mass of twisted wires and at once the light and power facilities in the section south of Sixth street and east of Main street, including south of Sixth road in Boyle Heights, was left without light or power.

Both at the main station and at the substation, the electricians at once noticed that a short circuit had burned out the big cables, and repair men were hurried out to locate the break. As the short circuit was caused indirectly by an employé of the Leigh Investment Company, it is believed that the Edison Electric Company will hold it responsible for the damage. A big force of men was put to work as soon as the break was found, but the company could not serve its Boyle Heights patrons as usual last night.

Yesterday's accident makes the third time recently that aëronauts have interfered with light or power lines, and officials of the two electric companies say they cannot be held responsible if some daring aëronaut is killed to death while making a descent. Two weeks ago the wires of the Los Angeles Gas and Electric Company were disturbed by a parachute alighting on them and a serious if not fatal accident is expected any time.

CHAT "DARE DEVIL."

Charles Colby, known as "Dare Devil" because of his thrilling "leap-the-gap" feat, took the place of the ill-fated Le-Vere, who committed suicide in this city. Colby has made five or six ascensions, and has had several narrow escapes from serious injury besides the accident of yesterday.

Manager Lehigh of Chutes Park declared last night that the aëronaut will continue to make his ascensions. He said Colby is not disturbed by his narrow escape from electrocution, and jokingly spoke of the unexpected fireworks that were set off for his special benefit.

MELANCHOLY.

BY DERRINGER ROUTE LEAPS.

DEPRESSED BY ILLNESS, MAN ENDS HIS LIFE.

Body With Bullet Hole Through the Mouth Is Found in Sunset Park. Leaves Note Making Request to Avoid Shock in Notifying Friend in This City.

Dead in Sunset Park, with a bullet hole through the mouth, and the lips turned blue by the powder from an old 32-calibre derringer that lay near him, A. B. Johnson was found yesterday morning by Mr. and Mrs. H. L. Budworth of No. 2766 West Ninth street.

Johnson was despondent because of declining health and lack of employment, but his illness was against him. He arose early yesterday morning and went out to the park to end it all. He put the muzzle of the old-fashioned gun in his mouth and pulled the trigger.

In the young man's pocket a note was found:

"Notify Rev. Henry L. Badger, 182 Pacific avenue—West 1495. He will notify those concerned. Do not shock mother as he is an elderly man, and the sudden shock might result seriously to him. A. B. Johnson."

Rev. Badger said last night that the young man has a sister in Oxnard, the wife of Rev. N. N. Badger of that city. Mrs. Badger is very ill, and it is feared that the news of her brother's death will greatly aggravate her condition.

The body was taken to the Pierce undertaking establishment.

THE POLITICAL WATCH TOWER

I have it from close friends of Philip A. Stanton, Speaker of the last Assembly, that he is not out of politics, after all; that too literal a construction has been placed on the remarks he made on the closing day of the Legislature. He was ill and worn out with the labors of eighty strenuous days and nights when he expressed the "hope and wish" that his appearance then was to be his last in public life. Things have changed since then.

For nearly two months now the Speaker has been flat on his back, part of the time in a local hospital, and then at his home on West Thirty-first street, a victim of myocarditis. While his condition at no time has been critical, his physician has insisted upon absolute quiet, hardly permitting the patient to step on the floor, in order that compensatory hypertrophy, in medical lingo, may get in its work.

Aside from mastering the pronunciation and meaning of compensatory hypertrophy, Stanton has been gathering political straws, of which he now has quite a sheaf. What he has gleaned, I understand, has been instrumental in persuading him to hedge on the statements he made in Sacramento, and to let it be known that, while he has given up all further ambitions for legislative positions—including Congress—he might still aspire to something better.

All of which leads back to the announcement made in Sacramento dispatches to The Times last January, to the effect that Stanton will be candidate for Governor next year.

It will be a great surprise to many politicians if a strong Stanton club is not organized in Los Angeles early in the coming State campaign. For it will be necessary that clubs be formed to boost each candidate and to help defray the campaign expenses.

Every candidacy for Governor, under the new direct primary law, will involve an expenditure of several thousand dollars. The law permits each candidate for this office to expend not more than $2000, or a figure close thereto. This amount would just about pay the expense of circulating the petition needed to place the name on the official primary ballot. The petition of a candidate for Governor must contain at least 1 per cent of the party vote in at least ten counties of the State, and a total of a least 1 per cent of the total party vote in the State.

This means that none but a wealthy candidate can afford to make the race, and it is predicted that there will be scores of clubs throughout the State for the promotion of various candidacies.

While any man of any party has the right under the law to file a petition for nomination, not one can escape the initial cost of circulating his petitions in at least ten counties.

Then will come the campaign for nomination at the primaries. Here the legal limit of expenditures that may be made by any one candidate will prevent even the wealthiest from making the run without outside assistance. Wherefore each candidate will be obliged to enlist the support of clubs in various parts of the State. The clubs may spend as much as they please.

I am pretty sure that Stanton never would make the race if Gov. Gillett were again to be a candidate. At one time there was a rumor that the Governor would like to succeed himself, but I hear now that he is not giving the matter any consideration.

Friends of the Governor prefer that he should not make a campaign for re-election, though it is admitted on all hands that he is probably the best and most fearless Chief Executive the State ever had. State political history, however, shows that no California Governor ever succeeded himself in office, and there are admirers of the Governor who feel that he could not afford to run in the coming campaign in face of the apparent inclination of the voters to deny a second term.

The fact is that Gov. Gillett was looked upon as the logical successor of George C. Perkins in the United States Senate. Senator Perkins is 70 years old and not in the best of health. He has been in the Senate since 1895 and now is entering upon his third regular term. He never again will be a candidate, and it is not impossible that he will retire before 1915, the expiration of his present term.

It is pointed out by politicians that, should Gov. Gillett make a campaign for reelection and be defeated in next year's campaign, he would not be in the best position to seek the seat now occupied by Senator Perkins, so there are some Republicans who would like to see him step down at the close of his present term and await the time that he shall be called to the United States Senate.

This is mere gossip, however, and it may be that it is far from the mark.

Sheriff Hammel is not yet a "dead duck" as a possible candidate to succeed himself in office, despite the talk among politicians that there is a hoodoo over aspirants to third terms in the county government. United States Marshal Youngworth is keen for the office of Sheriff, and his friends are with him, but Hammel likewise has a long list of supporters, and I should not be at all surprised to see the present Sheriff give all his opponents a hot race.

No one has raised a word against Hammel. In fact, he has been praised many times by many people because of the excellent record he has made. The only objection I ever heard raised against him is that he has been elected twice to the office, that he has been Chief of Police of Los Angeles, and has held other political jobs. But he seems to have made good in all of them, and no one has denied him the right of trying once more for his present place.

Looking down from my perch the other day, I saw quite a procession of past, present and would-be occupants of the Mayor's chair, which led me to look a bit into the preliminaries of the coming city campaign. First in the parade was former Mayor McAleer, who retired from politics some time before he quit office. Bustling along behind him, his head thrown back and his chest thrust forward, pattered former Mayor Harper, oblivious to the fact that his predecessor was just ahead of him and that his successor was just behind—all in chronological order, you see. Mayor Alexander was not hurrying; he was just tugging away at his little tuft of chin whiskers and apparently ruminating. Then came O. E. Farish, who sought the Democratic nomination three years ago as against Harper, and who still has ambitions. Then former Mayor Snyder walked by with a stately stride, as becomes a banker who has no political aspirations.

No one would pretend to fathom the thoughts that surged through the minds of this quintette, but I happen to know some of them. In the first place, Harper is eliminated from consideration as a possible candidate this fall. The reasons are obvious. It is known that Mr. Snyder, who was a pretty good Mayor several times, has no further political ambitions.

As for Alexander, he is an enigma. He is in the hands of Earl and Lissner, and no one knows what they intend to do with him. If he can succeed in building up a strong machine in face of the opposition in his own ranks, he will, I hear, be a candidate once more. But let that bridge be crossed when it is reached.

I know that Farish has his lightning rod up. The fact that he failed to get the nomination three years ago does not disconcert him. If enough silk-stocking Democrats are free of entanglements with the Earl-Lissner machine, take it from me that Farish will go into the contest for the nomination.

McAleer is like most office seekers before the opening of a campaign—in the hands of his friends. He says so. He declares that his foundry takes all his time, but he is said to point with pride to the "vindication" that came to him through the downfall of Harper, his successor.

It is still fresh in all memories that McAleer made the statement once while Mayor that he had been placed in the way of accepting or rejecting an offer of $85,000, alleged to be graft money. He did not take the money, but he told about it and gained the sobriquet of "Honest Owen." The grand jury took a whirl at his statement, but nothing ever came of it.

Now that he has been "vindicated" through the resignation of Harper, McAleer is reported to be something more than a passive candidate for his old place—by election to prove that he was right, and eke that he was a good Mayor.

Still, aside from Farish, I gather from various sources that none of the men named will be even a candidate under the new direct primary system.

George A. Smith, if I mistake not, will be one of the principal Republican candidates. As a former member of the Council, he is well known, and his name has been mentioned before in connection with the Mayoralty. Still, there is talk to the effect that he is not the strongest man the Republican party can pick, and I know that several prominent politicians seek another, whose name cannot yet be divulged.

MILLIONS FOR IMPROVEMENT.

Chicago Passes Ordinances Calling for Expenditure of Huge Sums for Elevating Urban Tracks.

[BY DIRECT WIRE TO THE TIMES.]

CHICAGO, May 23.—[Exclusive Dispatch.] Ordinances have been passed for the expenditure of $19,000,000 for track elevation, which has not yet been started, according to additional proof sheets of the forthcoming report of Walter J. Raymer, track elevation expert.

This does not include elevation of the Chicago and Oak Park Elevated road tracks in Austin. An ordinance providing for this work was passed once, but will again be put through the Council before the vacation period. It will call for the expenditure of $3,000,000 or $4,000,000.

The significance of this large expenditure is indicated by the raving of 1380 lives in the elevation of 748 miles of tracks, already completed at a cost of $53,822,000, says the report.

M. K. Trumbull, engineer of the department, estimates that it will cost about $150,000,000 to elevate all tracks in Chicago. Only 44 per cent, so far have been raised.

Commissioner Raymer said that the report will be more valuable than any ever issued in this country on track elevation, because it will have more detailed and exhaustive information. The report will contain a copy of every ordinance passed by the City Council, with maps and plans, showing in detail the methods of construction and development of track elevation.

BURN NAPLES FOR THE ELKS.

PYROTECHNIC DISPLAY THIS WEEK FOR BENEFIT.

Chairman of Executive Committee of Arrangements for Big Fraternal Gathering Speaks About Need of Funds to Carry Out Programme as Prepared.

The carnival of Naples and eruption of Vesuvius, a pyrotechnic display, will be given each evening this week at Fiesta Park to secure additional funds for the Elks' celebration next July.

"We are desirous of giving the best possible entertainment to our visitors," said Postmaster Flint, yesterday, "and it will cost a lot of money to pay expenses. Inasmuch as the celebration is bound to do the city much good in the way of publicity, we think we are entitled to support from the residents of Los Angeles. Everything will be on a much larger scale than when the Shriners were here two years ago. We have a good start on our $100,000 fund, but considerable more money must be raised. We would dislike to curtail on our present programme, but some things must be given up unless we secure more funds."

As chairman of the Executive Committee, Mr. Flint has had the brunt of the work preparatory to the celebration. He has all arrangements practically completed, but a lot of details remain which are dependent upon the amount of money raised by entertainments and subscriptions.

Fiesta Park is an ideal place for the fireworks. There is abundant seating capacity and the audience will be far enough from the stage to enjoy the scenic features.

The carnival was produced all last summer at Manhattan Beach, near New York and Pain brings the same equipment to this city. After giving the spectacle here, he will go to Seattle where the carnival will be one of the side attractions of the exposition.

The scene is laid in Naples and many pretty dances and choruses help to fill in the first part. The eruption of Vesuvius is said to be realistic, being accompanied by a terrific discharge of fireworks. Following the burning of Naples, there will be a fine display of set pieces, rockets and candles.

The net proceeds will go to the Elks' entertainment fund.

DEATH ENDS SUFFERING.

Miss Belle Foster, who was terribly burned at Compton early last April, died at the County Hospital yesterday. She was burning rubbish when her dress caught fire and about a third of her body was burned before the flames were extinguished. Her case aroused much interest among medical men because burns of the extent of those which she suffered are usually fatal. She was progressing nicely when kidney trouble and other complications set in and were the direct cause of death. She was about 40 years of age.

Dishes have to be washed 1095 times a year—Why not let the Gold Dust Twins do the work?
It stands to reason that if you save a little labor each time you wash your dishes, it will amount to a great deal of relief at the end of the year. Gold Dust softens hard water, cuts dirt and grease from the dishes and with its use the dishes require little else than rinsing and wiping. Washing dishes in the old way meant drudgery—with Gold Dust it is merely child's play.
Gold Dust makes dish water that digs. It goes deep after every hidden particle of dirt and germ life and sterilizes as well as cleans.
Do not use Soap, Naphtha, Borax, Soda, Ammonia or Kerosene with Gold Dust. Gold Dust has all desirable cleansing qualities in a perfectly harmless and lasting form. The Gold Dust Twins need no outside help.

MELLOW AGE, FIERY YOUTH.

John H. Vincent is a bishop in the Methodist Episcopal Church. He is a man of mature years, unmodern probably in many of his views of life and its interests. He has had much opportunity for observing the trend of affairs in the country. His judgment is calm and conservative; his disposition is mellow, kindly and sunny as becomes the old age of one who has led a virtuous life and whose mind has been turned to benevolent considerations from his youth.

Bishop Vincent in addressing a gathering at Chicago, known as the Chicago Methodist Social Union, declared his conviction, from his experience of life and observation of his fellow-men, that "The world is growing better and better; that civilization, especially as exemplified in life in Chicago, is distinctly on the mend."

Now, in our opinion, that view, coming from a man of such length of days, broad experience, soberness of mind and mellowness of heart, is worth more than a passing notice. It impresses us as being instinct with truth.

Bishop Vincent has a son, a professor of sociology in the University of Chicago. He is a young man, entirely modern, seemingly "a hotspur in debate." His opportunities of observing the conditions of life among his fellows have not extended over the number of years his father has had. He lacks the ripeness which time usually brings to minds and spirits. Following his father, both speaking on the same topic, "The Vicissitudes of Life," George Edward Vincent, son of the bishop, says that in his opinion, "The world is growing more selfish every day."

Now here is a direct clash between the opinions of the father and of the son. We have to choose between the one and the other, for both cannot be exact. The only way to reconcile them would be by assuming that the young man's observation extends but little, if any, beyond Chicago University. If he is speaking of himself and his associates in that great institution, even including the pupils who sit in his classroom, possibly we may not feel like disabling his opinion. But if, on the contrary, we conceive him to be expressing the general opinion of conditions among all the people of the country, then either he or his father fails to see things as they are.

For ourselves, we confess to be prejudiced in favor of optimism. Indeed, we own to some resentment of mind against pessimism, and, therefore, are naturally inclined to lean to the opinion expressed by the father and to dissent from that expressed by the son.

But dismissing this prejudice and resentment, is there not a natural basis on which to ground our preference for the bishop's views over those of the younger man? Bishop Vincent has observed the trend of conditions during two generations. He, therefore, has a standard of comparison. When he says the world is growing better he means that it is better today than it was fifty years ago; that the present generation is better than the last past. Now note, a man is naturally inclined to give the preference to his own generation over the one that follows. This is often held up as a weakness of human nature. We are disposed to look back "to the good old days of yore" and contend that everything was much better when we were young than at the present time. Therefore, Bishop Vincent's view is an unbiased one. He prefers the new generation, which can hardly be called his, to the old one with which he started. With the son there is no standard of comparison worth while. He has not had time or opportunity to observe the trend.

But there is a still wider philosophy and a sounder one than we have touched upon yet, which inclines us to side with the father Vincent against the son. As a stream runs to the sea, so the current of life runs in a steady course; only the water runs down hill and human history runs up. There are eddies in the stream and the unwise might say, looking at the eddy, that the water runs up hill. So there are eddies in the general course of human history, and somebody looking narrowly might contend that this stream of human life runs down toward the pit instead of upward toward the stars. But the person who fixes his eyes upon the middle of the Columbia River or the Hudson, never doubts which way it is sweeping. Just so one who fixes his mind upon the great current of human life, start at what point he may in history, and end where he will, will find that the whole tendency of civilization has been toward higher levels, toward better things, toward a purer womanhood, nobler manhood, higher intelligence, better living, broader charity, greater tolerance, and everything that belongs to virtue and links our destinies with the angels and heaven.

"A DEMORALIZED PARTY."

Mark Sullivan is certainly a very much worried Democrat. Under the headline which we have quoted above, in a page article in Collier's Weekly, Mr. Sullivan bewails the apostasy of almost 50 per cent. of the so-called "Democratic" Representatives in Congress at the present time.

Mr. Sullivan illustrates his article with two maps showing the political complexion of the United States in 1908 and in 1893. In the first map the "Black Republicans" are shown as sweeping twenty-eight States of the Union for Mr. Taft. In the other map the "White Democrats" appear as carrying all the States excepting fourteen. Lack of fealty to the principles of the party is considered by the writer as the explanation for this change of political complexion on the face of the United States.

Mr. Sullivan's way of proving his theory is by analysis of the vote on the tariff bill still before Congress. There are 171 members of the House of Representatives who were elected on Democratic tickets. Of these, 38 are voting with the Republicans for a protective tariff on lumber, 29 for protective tariff on hides, and 23 to maintain the Republican rules which enable the Speaker of the House of Representatives to carry on business in that body. This makes 90 members of the House elected on Democratic tickets who prove unfaithful to the trust reposed in them by their party. Deducting 17 duplicates in the figures above, it leaves a net 73 unfaithful Democrats in the House. This is almost half the Democratic members. If 8 more should prove unfaithful it would evenly divide the party vote in the House. Mr. Sullivan has no doubt that if more votes had been needed to uphold the Republican policies in detail they would have been forthcoming. Indeed, he is in doubt whether there are enough Democrats in the House to save it from deserved destruction if the required number was put at the lowest figure on which salvation was promised to Sodom and Gomorrah by the angels sent down to punish these cities of the plains for their wickedness.

Mr. Sullivan finds one true-enough Democrat in the House of Representatives. This is a Mr. Kitchen, who represents a district in North Carolina. The man from the Tar-heel State is quoted with much approval as saying: "I do not advocate a thing as proper and right because it is down South, and oppose the same thing as improper and wrong because it is not down South. In a matter of legislation which affects the whole people I want to look beyond my district, beyond my State. I want to look at 90,000,000 American people; and, sir, if the people of my district wish their Representative to vote for a measure which will take, not by labor, not for received value, but by the dry, naked law, millions of dollars from all the people and put it into the pockets of a very few of my people down South, I would say to them that they ought to send here not me, not a Democrat, but a Republican, from my district."

Sullivan proceeds to analyze the Democratic vote by States. He finds that Georgia has a solid Democratic representation in Congress, consisting of eleven Democrats. Seven of them voted for tariff on lumber. Texas has another solid Democratic delegation, represented by sixteen members in Congress. Fourteen of them voted for a tariff on hides, and two of these also for a tariff on lumber. Again, Louisiana has a solid Democratic delegation in Congress. All six of these voted for a tariff on lumber, two for a tariff on hides, two of them with the Republicans on organization. Florida also has a solid Democratic delegation, and two of these voted for a tariff on lumber. Virginia has ten Congressmen, nine of them Democrats, but five of the nine voted for a lumber tariff. North Carolina has seven Democratic Congressmen, and all but one (Mr. Kitchen) voted for a tariff on lumber.

These are hard lines for the Democratic party, as it stands constituted today. There is no doubt of the unfaithfulness of all these so-called Democrats who voted with the Republicans on these details in the tariff bill. The Democratic platform made at Denver in July says: "We demand the repeal of the tariff on wood pulp, print paper, lumber, timber and logs, and that these articles be placed on the free list." The article in Collier's Weekly says: "This plank is the one most exploited by the Democratic orators in Nebraska, Iowa, Kansas—in all these States where trees don't grow and people do build houses. It was by virtue of this plank that Bryan carried Nebraska."

This last quotation from Mr. Mark Sullivan's own article ought to have opened his eyes to the true inwardness of the unfaithfulness of the members of his party in Congress. If this proves unworthiness on the part of the Democratic members in the present Congress, when was there a Congress and who were the Democratic members thereof who were faithful to the party? When the Dingley tariff bill was passed twelve years ago the members of the Democratic body were just as lacking in fidelity to their own doctrines as expressed in the platform of that year as these are today. The members of the present Congress elected on Democratic tickets are no more betrayers of the party interests than almost all Democratic members in all Congresses have been, time out of mind.

Did not that eminent Democrat, the nominee of that party for the Presidency in 1880, enunciate the very principle (Mr. Sullivan would probably say lack of principle) when Gen. Hancock declared that the tariff is a merely local issue? That was good Democratic doctrine in 1880 and it is good today. It has always been good Democratic doctrine, ever since the days of John C. Calhoun, who first attempted to graft Cobdenism onto his party as Democratic doctrine. There never was a Democratic Congress in which the members did not vote just as those at Washington vote now—for protection to each and every product of their own district and against protection for each and every product of the country not in their own district. There may have been unimportant exceptions, as in the case of Mr. Kitchen of North Carolina in the present Congress. When the Payne-Aldrich tariff bill shall be put on its final passage in House and Senate every one of these Democrats will vote against the bill as a whole, although they have been instrumental in providing for the tariff upon many of the items in the different schedules. So they voted when the last tariff bill was passed.

If we go back four years farther in history to the time when the Democratic party carried nearly all the States in the Union and had control of all branches of the government, we shall find in that Democratic Congress the same agreement with Gen. Hancock's dictum on the tariff as in the present instance. It was the spirit which governed that body so entirely when finally the famous Wilson bill was passed that the Democratic President refused to sign it. The Democrats from each State had been so insistent upon protection for the products of that State that by the time the roll of the States was called pretty nearly everything produced in Democratic States was found to be fairly well protected.

Perhaps the last paragraph in the article in Collier's reveals the true reason for the demoralization of the Democratic party. Mr. Sullivan skims over the journalism of the country. He finds in all the States of the East, North and Northwest a single large daily newspaper which deserves to be called Democratic or that consistently claims to be Democratic. That is a paper in Buffalo owned by Mr. Mack, the Democratic national chairman. The New York World is not Democratic, nor is the Baltimore Sun. In Boston, Philadelphia, Pittsburgh, Cincinnati, Cleveland, Chicago, Indianapolis, St. Paul, Minneapolis, Seattle, Portland, where is there a paper that even calls itself Democratic? Down in Louisville the Courier-Journal is "regular," and in Omaha the World-Herald is considered a Democratic paper. Down in the South the brand "Democrat" on the newspapers does not hold in fealty to the party principles even the men the party sends to Congress. A party without representative newspapers in the great centers of population in the United States, and a party whose only principle is greed, may surely be well characterized as a demoralized party.

ALL ABOARD!

THE NICKEL MYSTERY.

It's all very well to accuse Britishers of emotional insanity or dementia Germanica; at the same time don't forget that Germany is plugging away at that whopping naval programme of hers. This fact may have some effect on our own naval activity. In these days of peace conferences at Lake Mohonk and big fleets everywhere else, the United States can't afford to go to sleep. We don't need to get excited over Germany's naval plans, but we must, for our own safety, keep an eye on what is being accomplished across the Atlantic.

This being the case, we, like Great Britain, are interested in the great nickel mystery, the clew to which is in the hands of a few Americans. There are two sources which supply the world with nickel: Ontario, Canada, and the French mines in New Caledonia. The Canadian mines yield at least three-quarters of the supply which is the base of steel plates for armored ships. The world's Dreadnoughts would not be dreaded but for nickel.

Now, although the nickel mines are in Canada, they are not owned by Canadians. A company of Americans controls the supply. It mines and roasts the ore at Sudbury, Ontario, but the refining is done at New Jersey and the finished product is shipped across the Atlantic from New York.

But who gets it? That's what Great Britain would like to know and what we ought to be informed about. That Germany gets it is the idea of most people who trouble to think about the subject, and they believe she has accumulated a vast store of it designed for use in armor plates.

The American company which owns the Ontario mines is very secretive, not only about whom it exports to, but how much it sends. The Canadian government has so far failed to get from it figures as to the exact output of nickel product.

Since the Anglo-German fuss reached the hysterical stage a loud roar has been heard in Ontario because of the supposition that Canadian nickel is shipped in large quantities to "an enemy of the empire." The newspapers of Toronto argue that imperial policy may require an investigation. "Canadian nickel should not be employed to build ships to destroy ours," exclaims one patriotic sheet. But, seeing that Germany has accumulated a great store of the product, probably enough to last for several years, how can it be prevented?

NEW TURKISH POLICY.

The new government of Turkey, under the recently-enthroned Sultan, is in one respect showing a reform spirit. The bloodthirsty bigots guilty of the massacres in Asia Minor are being brought to taw and punished for their misdeeds. The most recent news from the Ottoman empire tells of the hanging of thirty-five of these murderers.

There are two points of view from which to regard this news with satisfaction. The thought is intolerable that justice might not be meted out to those who committed wholesale murder, and there arose a question whether or not foreign intervention might not be necessary to compel the Turkish government to bring these fanatics to answer for their misdeeds.

Outbreaks are liable to occur not only in misgoverned countries like Turkey, but in the best governed countries, even our own. We have had our share of trouble created by mob violence and have been at certain times on the verge of international difficulties because of the killing of the subjects of other governments. The murder of the Italians in New Orleans was a notable case in point when the government of Italy was much stirred up because of the failure on the part of the State of Louisiana to take due cognizance of the crime. Another case was the murder of the Chinese in Wyoming some years ago; and only the other day incipient mob violence against the Japanese in San Francisco and other points upon the Coast created friction between our government and that of Japan.

We should be conservative in intermeddling in these cases with the action of foreign governments. Of course, the nation is bound to protect its citizens, wherever they may be found, but patience is counseled by the difficulties we have encountered ourselves. The bringing of criminals of this kind to justice in the United States, in spite of our high degree of civilization, is particularly complicated, because of our system of State governments by which crimes are punished only in the courts of States wherein the offense has been committed. The dealings of foreign governments must necessarily be with our Federal government and often there is no legal way of procedure by which the government at Washington can step in and compel State officers to do their duty.

Had the Turkish government not shown a proper disposition to punish those who destroyed the property and took the lives of American citizens, no trouble nor expense could have been spared on our part to enforce respect for our flag and citizenship. The action of the new government has delivered us from any such necessity.

News from Constantinople would seem to indicate that Young Turkey is really making a manful effort to bring about better conditions than under the old regime. It is said that the real spirit of progress exists in Constantinople and will [illegible] throughout the empire. It is greatly to be [illegible] for the sake of the civilized world and of [illegible] in particular that these hopes will be [illegible] realized. At the same time, it is competent to [illegible] notice that these encouraging reports come for [illegible] most part through English sources.

Blow cold and keen across the naked hills,
And crisp the lowland pools with crystal films,

Wind of the gold and crimson sunset lands—
Blow fresh and pure across the peaks and [illegible]
And broaden the blue spaces of the heavens,
And sway the grasses and the mountain pines,
But let my dear one rest.

Wind of the East,
Wind of the sunrise seas,
Wind of the clinging mists and gray, harsh [illegible]
Blow moist and chill across the waves of [illegible]
And shut the sun out and the moon and stars,
And lash the boughs against the dripping [illegible]
Yet keep thou from my love.

But thou, sweet wind!
Wind of the fragrant South,
Wind from the bowers of jasmine and of [illegible]
Over magnolia blooms and lilied lakes,
And flowering forests, come with dewy wings,
And stir the petals at her feet, and kiss
The low mound where she lies.

The Severity of the Turk.

MUSIC AND THE STAGE.

Never run so long in Los Angeles ever first a new show is a novelty. The only new one yesterday was Murray and Mack, at the Grand Operahouse. "Finnegan's Ball," the high-brow entertainment which these gentle Irish humorists are purveying this week, is the oldest in their list, the backbone, the foundation, as it were, of their notable successes in serious drama which followed it. The author, according to the overall advertisement, is one George H. Emerick. The placing of his name at the top of the bill is a matter of correct carefulness, else the audience might have guessed that George Bernard Shaw, or perhaps Oscar, in one of his wildest moments, might have been responsible.

At any rate, it is a play with a more connected plot than the present-day burlesque and has several situations which, if carried out more carefully, would be very, very good.

The piece belongs to the good old days when audiences loved to see burly Irish widows portrayed by male individuals, and jokes were of the slightly practical sort. Nevertheless it is the best thing Murray and Mack have yet shown their Grand Opera-house audience. As is customary, however, Murray and Mack have diluted the piece of too much comedy. It goes together in spots, and as it is of the same general scheme and at least as lots of reason, the plot manages to hang together.

Mr. Murray waxes really funny at times. The faculty of making others laugh is not possessed by all people, but Mr. Murray distinctly has the gift, and were he offered the opportunity or had he the inclination to improve his situations, get more out of them, turn to higher-grade stuff and expand some of his scenes, the show as a whole would become doubly entertaining—for Mr. Murray is really the show. One can't forget Mr. Mack's hearty efforts, of course. But work is work—and humor is a matter of innate talent, as these you are.

Murray and Mack repeat their burlesque bowing scene of last week—two minutes in genuinely uproarious farce. Miss Moore plays the Irish widow, daughter, in a Yiddish comedy voice and effective make-up. Bobby Harrington is again the Cohan-candy kid, while Little Sutherland is, as usual, the quick-stepping, short-skirted foil. Florence Leslie has devised several diverting choral numbers, and the Marquis Trio—quartette—of which Mr. Ellis and his vocal duos are very efficient—lend the number and a demand for an indefinable series of encores.

"Playing the Ponies," Kolb and Dill's clever satire on race-track methods, commenced its second week at Hamburger's Majestic Theater last evening.

"The Circus Girl," which is the largest and most musical production ever put on by the Burbank stock company, commenced its second week at the Burbank yesterday.

Howard Scott will play the Mansfield part in Clyde Fitch's "Beau Brummel" tonight at the Belasco Theater. Considerable interest attaches to this venture, as it is the first time the play has ever been presented in stock, as well for the well-known character creating talents of the actor in question.

Mr. and Mrs. Thilo Becker have announced the dates of their recitals, as locally announced here. The dates at present fixed are Tuesday evening, June 8, and Saturday afternoon, June 12.

Mrs. Fiske, with her company, will present "Salvation Nell" at the Auditorium during the week commencing June 7. The complete production, which is a very heavy one, will be brought direct from New York.

Five pupils of Leslie Marsh will give a recital at the Ebell Club house on Tuesday evening, June 1.

John Daly Murphy is in the cast of Lew Field's summer production, "The Midnight Sons," at the Broadway Theater, New York.

MRS. COLBY DEAD.

Well-Known Local Soprano Joins the Great Choir Invisible—Prominent Here in Many Artistic Works.

Local musical circles suffer a loss in the death of Mrs. Frank H. Colby, who passed away yesterday morning at her home, No. 1424 Reid street, after years of semi-invalidism and some months of acute suffering.

Mrs. Colby as a soprano and her husband as an organist have made a deserved place in the artistic arena of Southern California. Mrs. Colby was for five years soloist with the church organization at Simpson Auditorium, and later was seven years at the Church of the Unity. She had been associated with her husband in musical work twelve years, and his loss is therefore more than a family one.

She had a voice of unusually beautiful quality and sympathy, with excellent training as a foundation for most expressive use.

Mrs. Colby had hosts of warm friends and admirers, and was for years a member of the Monday Musical Club. She was also a charter member of the Fortnightly Club.

The deceased singer was only 33 years of age, and was the daughter of Theodore Todd of Ventura. She leaves two brothers, Fred O. Todd of Ventura and Theodore C. Todd of Los Angeles, and besides, a little son.

Although born in New York State, Mrs. Colby had lived in Los Angeles since early childhood. Funeral services will be held at Bresee Bros. tomorrow morning at 10:30 o'clock.

ALHAMBRA.

ALHAMBRA, May 23.—Misses Phelan and Basata will move their stock of dry goods to new quarters in the Hellman block about June 1.

Dr. and Mrs. F. E. Corey were the recipients of a delightful surprise, when neighbors and friends called to congratulate them on their thirty-ninth wedding anniversary.

The Misses Nettie, Emma and Laura Thorsen, who are the guests of Miss Anna M. Phelan, will leave soon for their home at Jacksonville, Ill.

Miss Rachel Gray of Whittier has obtained a position in Architect R. Byron Woolpert's office.

Commencement day for the Alhambra High School will be June 25 and the class day exercises will take place on the preceding day.

The "Spook Club" was informally entertained by Miss Myrtle Bayles at her home on South Marengo avenue, recently. The affair was an announcement party, Miss Bayles making known her engagement to R. C. King of Myrtle Creek, Or. Her family will accompany her North for the marriage, which will take place early in June. Several functions will be given in Miss Bayles's honor by the club, the first being a shower at the home of Miss Agnes McMillan.

Mr. and Mrs. Harry Mayberry entertained, recently, in honor of Mr. and Mrs. E. E. Ford, who leave soon for Europe. Mrs. Mayberry is matron of Alhambra Chapter, No. 182, Order of the Eastern Star, and officers of the order were among the invited

The Finest Corsets in Various Models

"What is the matter with my corsets?" a woman will sometimes ask. "I try to get the best and yet they are not comfortable."

The secret of lasting satisfaction with a corset lies in having it fitted. Physicians tell us that the importance of this cannot be overestimated, for no matter how cleverly a corset is designed, there will always be some individual turn to a figure which only the fitter can suit. So we prefer always to fit our fine corsets. There is no charge for this, of course.

Among favorites this season are Redfern, Warner's, Parrine, Lestelle, Lily of France and the Rengo Belt; styles adapted for well-developed women, tall women and stout women.

"Black Cat" Hosiery

Women who like this brand of hosiery best will be glad to learn the news:

Classified Liners.

Times Classified rates: The rate for inserting "Want" ads in The Daily Times is 1c per word for each insertion; in the Sunday issue 1½c per word, each insertion; minimum charge, 25c; except under following classifications the rate for which is 10c per line, minimum charge 30 cents: "Society Meetings," "Personals," "Special Notices," Church Notices, Miscellaneous," and "Bath and Massage."

"Liner" (Classified) advertisements for Sunday insertion received over the counter or by telephone after 11:30 o'clock Saturday night will be inserted under heading "Too Late to Classify."

Sunday real estate advertisements, to be classified properly, must be in The Times office before 10:30 o'clock Saturday night. Rates 1½c per word.

The Sunday circulation of The Times exceeds 77,000 copies, and more "liners" are regularly printed in its columns than in the five other Los Angeles newspapers combined.

Telephone your want advertisements. Ring up "The Times" any time of day or night and secure prompt and careful attention.

The Times cannot guarantee accuracy or assume responsibility for errors of any kind occurring in telephoned advertisements.

THE TIMES will not be responsible for more than one incorrect insertion of any advertisement ordered for more than one time.

Advertisers should retain receipts given by The Times in payment for "Liners," as no mistakes can be rectified without them.

SPECIAL NOTICES—

TO "LINER" ADVERTISERS:

Dating from June 1, classified advertising in The Times will be charged by the word at the established rate of 1c per word in the daily issue and 1½c Sunday.

These calculations, covering a period of several months, develop the fact that the average number of words to the line are a fraction over seven. This basis for charge, therefore, will prevail after June 1.

Cash "want" advertising has always been calculated by the word, and this regulation will not change the manner of handling it.

The present "want" ad. rate has been in effect for many years, though the circulation of the paper, now more than 50,000 daily and 80,000 Sundays, has trebled during this period. No paper in the United States, rate considered, compares with The Times in "want" ad. service.

THE TIMES-MIRROR COMPANY.

FOR SALE—TO "LINER" ADVERTISERS:
Dating from June 1, classified advertising in The Times will be charged by the word at the present established rate of 1c per word in the daily issue and 1½c Sunday.
Close calculations, covering a period of several months, develop the fact that the average number of words to the line are a fraction over seven. This basis for charge, therefore, will prevail after June 1.
Cash "want" advertising has always been calculated by the word, and this regulation will not change the manner of handling it.
The present "want" ad. rate has been in effect for many years, though the circulation of the paper, now more than 50,000 daily and 60,000 Sundays, has trebled during this period. No paper in the United States, rate considered, compares with The Times in "want" ad. service.

A Furniture sale of unusual importance.
Lovers of antique colonial furniture, oriental rugs, paintings, water colors, etchings, engravings, fine bric-a-brac and works of art, you will be interested to learn that an eastern client of our company has recently shipped the entire contents of an old New England home, expecting to remove his family to Southern California. Unforseen circumstances have arisen which to him seem to make such a change inadvisable and rather than repack and reship he has asked us to dispose of the property at once. The goods can be seen any day, including Sunday between 10 and 4, at 1001 Westlake ave., corner of 11th st. We will be pleased to have you call and inspect the property and quote prices. TO "LINER" ADVERTISERS:
Dating from June 1, classified advertising in The Times will be charged by the word at the present established rate of 1c per word in the daily issue and 1½c Sunday.
Close calculations, covering a period of several months, develop the fact that the average number of words to the line are a fraction over seven. This basis for charge, therefore, will prevail after June 1.
Cash "want" advertising has always been calculated by the word, and this regulation will not change the manner of handling it.
The present "want" ad. rate has been in effect for many years, though the circulation of the paper, now more than 50,000 daily and 60,000 Sundays, has trebled during this period. No paper in the United States, rate considered, compares with The Times in "want" ad. service.

HEAVERS MAKE GAMES WOBBLE.

Angels Get Best of Beavers on Two Ball Contests.

McCredie Uses Three Pitchers in Morning Struggle.

Two Players Fined for Rough Talks to Umpire.

Los Angeles, 4; Portland, 4. Morning game.

Los Angeles, 6; Portland, 5. Afternoon game.

It was a grand and glorious bargain day for baseball heavers yesterday and long before the sun went down a shrewd man with a little ready money might have bought enough to do up all the work on a small farm or to form a quadrille sets at a country dance. There were slingers to burn all day and fortunately the day came to an end before the managers could send for the ambulances and nurses. In the morning game at Vernon, Ort of the Beavers, while engaged in roasting the umpire from the bench, was fined $5 and chased into the club house, while in the afternoon, Ryan was given a similar fine for too much back talk.

Of course, each team was robbed at various times, or at least no one could make both bunches of players believe Umpire McCarthy is not a porch climber in disguise, ready and willing at all times to rob coats of their nannies or helpless children of their toys. He was off color yesterday in both games and the continual wrangling of the players and the howls of the fans kept the air quivering all day and his aid to the excited interest of two games that could have been won by either team in any inning.

Both were games that kept one's nerves frazzled, for there were errors, good pitching, strange umpiring, disordered yells and the unexpected explosion of pitchers mixed in a tangled mess and one had to show a lot of footwork to sidestep the complications and come out right. McCredie tried three pitchers in the morning game at Vernon and probably lost for this reason and in the afternoon he did not begin to change his heavers until too late. For the locals Koestner heaved good ball up to the eighth inning and would have lost the game, had not McCredie stuck in heaver Graney in the eighth in time for him to make a costly error that helped the locals tie the score. In the matinée game, with the locals safely in the lead, Hosp suddenly blew up in the ninth and had to be yanked out to give Brissette a chance to save the game.

Strange to relate there were few fielding stunts of any note and not being able to see anything worth raving over, the fans vented their feelings on the poor umpire. He had many changes for close decisions and no matter which way he decided, he was roasted and it might be stated that the varying opinions on what the ump did and did not do, made up the feature of the day. The day passed without any home runs, which was a distinct disappointment to the fans, who have come to expect such things every Sunday. As a matter of fact the heaving was too good in the early innings of both games, while in the latter parts the players were too tired from the strenuous day to hit the pill over the fence.

In the first inning of the morning game, Speas for Portland was hit by pitcher, ran to second on Ryan's sacrifice and was caught between second and third on Olson's fielder's choice. McCredie followed with a swat to left and when Godwin booted this, Olson scored. Then Koestner and Carson settled down to a pitcher's battle and nothing happened in the run line until the seventh, when Carson had all kinds of trouble. Smith singled; Delmas sacrificed; Dillon singled and then Ross, batting for Orendorff, bounced the ball to Kennedy, who tried to force out Smith at the plate but failed, and not only failed but threw the ball over the catcher's head, which put Dillon on third and Ross on second. Both scored when Daley hit to left.

With the score 3 to 1 in favor of the locals, Koestner started the eighth inning badly, for McCredie hit him for a single; Johnson was passed and then Breen was hit with the ball. McCredie and Johnson scored on infield outs and Breen ran in on a wild pitch, making the third run.

McCredie saw that Carson was about all in and in the last of the eighth, he put Graney to pitch. Beall hit a grounder down the first base line but Graney threw the ball wildly to Kennedy and Beall reached second. Howard bounced to Graney and he tried to catch Beall at third but failed, and Beall finally scored the tieing run on Delmas's infield out. Graney was thrown from the game after his high heave to third.

The Beavers played through their half of the ninth inning but the time limit expired just as the Angels were going to bat for their half and the game reverted back to eight full innings. This robbed McCredie of a hit and a steal; Ryan of a sacrifice and took two passes off Koestner's list, the game ending in a 4 to 4 tie.

The afternoon game drew over 5000 fans to Chutes Park and they saw Hosp pitch beautiful ball for eight innings, while in the ninth he had to be thrown on the bench. Willett went back again to pitch and while he heaved a fairly good game he was given poor support, by himself principally, for he made two errors and a wild pitch.

The locals did not seem to have much trouble making runs but as it turned out, they needed all they had for the Beavers caught Hosp tiring in the ninth and drove him to the bench, after slamming him for a triple, a double and two singles. Umpire McCarthy had his troubles in this game, and he slashed back with a fine of $5 for Ryan on account of back talk, and as he had fined Ort the same amount in the morning game, the league was $10 richer for the two games.

The locals opened up on Willett in the third inning for three runs as a result of Orendorff's double, Hosp's fielder's choice, Daley's single, Kennedy's muff of a thrown ball, a steal by Godwin and singles by Howard and Smith. Two more came in the seventh on a pass, sacrifice, error and a single and the final one from Dillon's triple to the Chutes gate and a wild pitch.

SAN FRANCISCO, May 23.—Vernon won the forenoon game from San Francisco, but lost the afternoon contest after a poor exhibition.

The forenoon game was the only contest out of the series of seven that has been won by the southern team. The afternoon game was distinguished by the number of errors piled up, but the San Francisco team redeemed itself somewhat by their hard hitting. Scores:

SACRAMENTO, May 23.—Brilliant fielding by Sacramento men shut off the Oakland's chances to score in several innings today, while the Senators produced a run from three hits bunched on Maire in the fifth. In the eighth when the Oakland's had every chance to score, a sensational play from Shinn to Byrnes shut off Van Haltren at the plate and McCay was caught by Fanning after running over the final three on a double, two singles and a triple.

LANGFORD FAVORITE.

British Sports Are Anxious to See the Black Perform and Have Made Him Favorite.

[ASSOCIATED PRESS NIGHT REPORT.]

LONDON, May 23.—Every seat in the National Sporting Club has been sold for tomorrow evening when Sam Langford, the Boston negro, will try to win the title of heavyweight champion of England from Ian Hague, who recently took it from "Gunner" Moir.

Jimmy Walsh, the American fighter and "Digger" Stanley will battle for the bantamweight championship of England.

The big fellows will fight twenty rounds for a purse of $9000 and the bantams fifteen rounds for $1750.

Langford and Walsh have been training together at Stonebridge Park, and with the small colony of Americans who have taken up their residence there, believe they have excellent chances of winning.

Langford, who will enter the ring at about 165 pounds, is giving considerable weight to Hague, but expects to overcome this disadvantage by his quickness, in which he excels the Yorkshire man. Langford is a strong favorite in the betting, some wagers having been made at 5 to 2 on him to win. Not much money has been wagered at these figures, however, and it is likely that Hague's stock will improve when the Yorkshire men arrive at the ring side and back their man.

JOHNSON ESCAPES.

ELIZABETH (N. J.) May 23.—[Exclusive Dispatch.] Jack Johnson, heavyweight champion, had a narrow escape from serious injury when his Chalmers-Detroit car crashed into a tree on North Broad street, just off Westfield avenue, at a sharp angle in the road. Johnson and a party of friends had to jump to escape. The negro fighter's car was badly smashed, and it took four hours to repair it. The machine is a new one, and will be shipped to Europe in a few days for Johnson's use.

SPEEDY FLYERS.

DE ROSIER NOT A COMPETITOR.

Escorted from the Coliseum Track by the Police.

Two Records Smashed in the Races by Motorcycles.

Graves Shows His Class in the Ten-Mile Event.

"Bulldozer" De Rosier, the demon motorcycle rider who has been breaking records as a Sunday diversion at the Coliseum race course for the last two months, tried to run the card of races to suit his own private tastes yesterday, and after demanding permission to ride in an unscheduled event, which Manager Smith refused, was escorted from the course under police protection.

While the gasoline Frenchman was making his exit, Ed Lingenfelder, riding an N.S.U. motor, established a new world's record for six miles covering the course in 6m. 28s. In the next event, the amateur ten-mile open race, Graves on the same machine smashed both the amateur and world's records for the distance, his time being 8m. 8 4-5s. De Rosier's professional record for ten miles made on the same track was 8m. 34s. while Huyck's amateur and former world's mark, made recently on the same course, was 8m. 12s.

On top of the De Rosier farce, and record-breaking stunts, the officials grew negligent in their scoring capacity and got so mixed up in checking the riders in the twenty-five-mile professional event that Ed Lingenfelder was given first place, when in reality he had two laps farther to ride to finish the distance, and had two laps to gain on Derkum. The latter protested, but the scorers had disappeared with their score sheets, and the mistake was not announced.

The time recorded for the twenty-five mile event was 24m. 10s. but the distance was not vouched for, the mark was not official. But three scorers were on hand to check three riders, and at least six checkers should have been available for the race. All three of the riders were obliged to stop one or more times during the long grind for repairs or supplies, and it was very evident that the scorers became confused, and gave the race to Lingenfelder when Derkum had completed the required number of laps.

Aside from the ruptured programme and the faulty supervision the events were thrilling, and undoubtedly some of the fastest riding yet seen on the local boards was exhibited when Ed Lingenfelder and Graves opened up the N.S.U. motor on their record trips. The N.S.U. machine which broke both the amateur and professional records was really the fastest thing on wheels ever ridden on the track, and the other machines appeared to take time out for a rest every time the N.S.U. motor whirled past.

Derkum also made a great ride in his mile exhibition, and came within two-fifths of a second of tying De Rosier's world record time of 47 4-5s. Paul got a splendid start, tore past the gun like a flash, and had completed the first circle before the excited spectators had hardly taken a full breath. Three and half times around the boards the dare devil pierced the atmosphere, and the timer's watches showed a mark of 48 1-5s for the mile. Here again the timing system was faulty. To catch the exact time of the rider when 500 feet from the finish line precluded the possibility of correctness, and yet the officials snapped their watches on one side of the great track, while the rider was passing the finish chalk on the opposite

THOMAS FLYER BREAKS COAST AUTO RECORD.

Sixteen Hours and Forty-five Minutes Is New Mark Established by Rene A. Brassey in His Big Seventy Horse-power Speedster.

SIXTEEN hours and forty-five minutes is the new San Francisco-Los Angeles automobile road record made yesterday by the Thomas Flyer. This lowers the record of Fernando Nelson's White Steamer by thirty-two minutes, and the former gasoline record held by Nelson's Columbia by 1h., 28m.

The Thomas left Market and Guerero streets, San Francisco, yesterday morning at 4 o'clock. Gilroy was reached at 5:45 o'clock, Paso Robles at 10 o'clock, Santa Maria at 12:04 o'clock and Los Angeles at 8:45 o'clock last night.

The actual running time of the Thomas was 15h., 55m. Fifty minutes were lost on the road on account of repairs and a delay at Santa Barbara, where the record-breakers were obliged to put up a $100 bond on a warrant for exceeding the speed limit.

Rene A. Brassey, in a seventy horse-power Thomas Flyer, smashed the San Francisco-Los Angeles automobile road record yesterday in a remarkable dash down the Coast road. The former road record was lowered by thirty-two minutes. The drivers were Harvey Herrick, Elmer W. Huber and Brassey. T. L. Simpson and Charles Cerillo were also in the car.

Twenty miles from Santa Barbara in a terrific effort to crack the mark Huber ended disastrously. While Huber was driving at near seventy miles an hour the big Thomas almost rolled into a ditch. It was swung back into the road by a supreme effort and the run was continued.

Racing on a fifteen-hour schedule Brassey tried to bring his car into Los Angeles an hour and thirty minutes sooner. The accident caused about forty-five minutes loss and precious time was also wasted at Santa Barbara where the autoists were arrested for speeding.

LOST TIME.

The other five minutes was lost in Santa Barbara when Sheriff Nat Stewart forced Brassey to stop at police headquarters and put up bail for his appearance. The Sheriff then rode on the car to the limit of the county, and forced the drivers to slow down to a comparatively slow pace. Again in Ventura the police met the car. Here Brassey was given more speed, however, and the Sheriff allowed the driver to push ahead at every possible minute.

Considering these delays the run of the Thomas is one of the greatest road runs ever made on the Coast, and the record made by Brassey and his men will undoubtedly stand for some time. Huber, the factory expert, took the car from San Francisco to Paso Robles. Herrick, awaiting the car at Paso Robles, held the wheel to Santa Maria, where Brassey joined the party. Herrick drove the last leg, from Santa Barbara, and brought the car into Los Angeles.

FAST RUNNING.

Fastest time was made from San Francisco to Paso Robles, the distance of 200 miles being run in six hours. A new mark was also established for the eighty-mile stretch from San Francisco to Gilroy, Herrick taking the big car through in 1h. and 45m. The trip to Paso Robles was easily the best leg of the run, and the big touring car bounded over the level stretches faster than seventy miles an hour.

From Gaviota to Santa Barbara the road was wretched. The run stretched parallel to the coast. The tide water had cut in from the ocean, and the spring freshets had carved gullies in the path. Tearing off the miles at a dangerous clip, the big car suddenly punched two wheels into the treacherous sand. Huber was at the wheel. He shut his eyes, and grimly hung on. Hesitation would have caused the car to turn turtle, but Huber by his remarkable nerve steadied the plunging monster. The damage amounted to a buckled steering rod. Brassey, who was in the front seat, rolled off the car into the road. The men in the tonneau were powerless to jump, so quickly was the danger met and passed.

SHERIFF ON HAND.

Four miles out of Santa Barbara Sheriff Nat Stewart of Santa Barbara arrested the flyers. The car arrived at police headquarters at 4:40 o'clock under police escort. The warrant of arrest and all formalities were prearranged. The Sheriff had received the time of the car at Santa Maria, and had figured the speed of the driver as too fast for the public safety. Brassey was obliged to put up bond of $100. The car left the police station at 4:50 o'clock.

From Ventura south the Thomas found the roads bad and the going wretched. The machine had to slow down repeatedly on the mountain grades owing to the sharp turns, and the extreme length of the carriage. No trouble was experienced with the motor in the entire trip. The six-cylinder engine hummed in perfect rhythm the whole distance, and the steep grades were all taken on the high gear.

But one change of tire was necessary, a front casing being torn when the car scraped the fence north of Santa Barbara. Diamond mountain tread tires were used, Marsh rims being put on before the start. Gasoline and oil were supplied on the road.

SOMETHING DOING.

SAMUELSON IS SPEEDY FLYER.

DEFEATS DUER AND WILLIAMS IN BICYCLE EVENT.

Winner Shows Fastest Time Ever Turned Up at Fiesta Stadium—F. Hamilton Suspended from Track for Six Months and Fined for Refusing to Enter a Certain Race.

W. E. Samuelson, paced by his brother, T. M. Samuelson, ran away from Ray Duer and Saxon Williams in the ten-mile motor-paced bicycle race at Fiesta Stadium yesterday afternoon, winning by two and one-half laps. The time was 14m. 54s., nearly a half minute slower than the time made in the two previous ten-mile events, Williams was about four laps behind Samuelson at the finish.

The pacing machine of J. P. Gunn, which Williams was following, broke down in the fourth lap of the sixth mile and the race had to be stopped while the machine could be repaired. Samuelson increased his lead after the contest was resumed and the other riders had no show to win.

Samuelson covered the second mile of the race in 54s., which is the fastest time that has been made in the Stadium to date. He gained a lap on Williams before the end of the first mile, and caught Duer on the fourth mile, during the remainder of the contest he did not ride at his fastest gait. He followed the pacing machine in perfect form. Williams and Duer lost their leaders several times, Williams once having competed in a paced race.

F. Florentine, the local rider, was ordered from the track for six laps for not starting in the amateur ten-mile race. Referee Gates fined him $20 for stepping out of the mile handicap event, and then Florentine refused to enter the next race. Florentine, who started from scratch, claimed that he was entitled to more handicap, and that he knew that he could not overtake them. He accused Gates of unfairness, saying that he had a grudge against him on account of an incident that occurred at the old Velodrome, where he raced two years ago.

Long and Gerber ran into each other on the seventh lap of the two-mile motor event and were thrown from their wheels. Neither man was badly hurt, and both remounted and rode in.

HANDICAP EVENTS TAME.

The handicap races were not as exciting as the events of the previous week. All four places in the first heat of the mile amateur race were won by men with big handicaps. McNeill and Berryessa, starting from scratch and the forty-yard mark, respectively, were able to overtake the bunch. In the second heat Williams, from the thirty-yard mark, managed to slip in third after a hard race. The handicaps were hastily rearranged for the finals, but Samuelson and Carroll could not catch up with the long leads.

Gordon Walker of Australia, riding from scratch, landed second place in the three-mile professional handicap, with a lead of 140 yards. Huber finished first, and the other places went to riders who had received big handicaps. Lawson and Williams punctured their tires and had to drop out. Samuelson and Duer did not start.

Iver Lawson won first place in the finals of the half-mile professional event, getting into the big money for the first time this season. When the men started to sprint for the tape on the last lap, Bardgett was leading, but Lawson, Samuelson and Walker flew past him, finishing in the order named in a hair-raising dash. Williams and Samuelson won the preliminary heats.

The special prizes for the leaders at the end of each half lap in the three-mile professional race were won by the following riders: Achorn, 9; Steve Senhouse, 7; J. P. Gunn, 7; T. Audkirk, 2; A. D. Tompkins, 3; J. G. Walker, 1. The men who went after the lap money were "all in" before the finish, and the fight for final money was between the men who lay back. "Long Bill" Furman had an off day and did not figure in any of the prize money. Walker made a strong bid for first place, but Pedlar Palmer, who had been given a handicap of 140 yards, beat him in a close finish.

McNeill, Williamson and Berryessa finished in the order named in the two-mile amateur lap race. The lap prizes were won as follows: Monnier, 7; Bryant, 4; Carroll, 4; Clifton, 2; Anthony, 1; Gerber, 1. Monnier, who is a youngster about 17 years of age, made his début as an amateur, and made a hit with the crowd by his fast riding. He won the novice race last week. Carroll finished fourth, several yards in back of the three first men. The results:

HIGH SCORES BY MARKSMEN.

RIFLE AND REVOLVER CLUB MEN DO GOOD WORK.

Crossman Proves the Winner After an Exciting Struggle With a New Expert—H. D. Thaxter Finishes First in the Monthly Medal Shoot of Los Angeles Revolver Sharps.

The Rifle and Revolver Club had its first shoot for the "Offhand Trophy" yesterday at Schuetzen Park, and Crossman finished with the greater number of bullseyes when the fun was over.

Conditions called for fifteen shots offhand at 200 yards, any rifle and any sights being allowed. The winner, according to the conditions, must win the medal three times to retain permanent possession of it, so the match Sunday is but the first of a series of struggles.

A dark horse by the name of Charles Lockwood, strayed out to the range with an old Spanish Mauser 7 m.m. rifle. Two-thirds of the way through his string, every other club member had his fingers crossed and was praying that the rifle would blow up. His final score was but one point below the winner, landing him second place, and this, in spite of the fact that he used a rifle that had not been fired for years, and was himself out of practice, and his ammunition old. Not satisfied with this stunt, Lockwood strayed down to the pistol range and landed first place in the practice pistol shoot. The club is trying to find out his real name.

Huddleston proved that shooting the army rifle of fifteen years ago and one of the modern rifles was the same thing, and, except for one bad shot, would have given the winner a fight for the trophy.

Bathey held up to his usual good average, but changes of light caught him in the middle of his string and took the medal away from him.

The conditions allowing any rifle brought out some weird shooting irons. Kellogg shot a rifle that looked as though it had been made out of bicycle tubing by a blind man, and then put through several horrible railroad wrecks. His score proved what a success he made of the job. Hansen used a 45-90 shotgun barrel on his Marlin, by some mistake, and the bullets tired of the journey to the target about halfway over. Aikin used a telescope sight, but as it was necessary to supplement the mountings with a piece of string, after the second shot, his score fell off accordingly from his usual good average. Many of the competitors used army Springfields.

Matches are to be shot with the Southern California Rifles, Bisbee Rifles, Spokane Rifle Club and the Seattle Rifle Association, but these have been delayed, awaiting the arrival of the ten new Springfields. Regular weekly shoots with both rifle and revolver are to be held in the future. The scores:

THAXTER WINS MEDAL.

DEFEATS GOOD MARKSMEN.

H. D. Thaxter finished first in the regular monthly medal shoot yesterday of the Los Angeles Revolver Club held at the Bishop-street range, his score being 264 out of a possible 300. This victory entitles him to the gold medal. W. A. Wright won the silver medal with a score of 262, and Dr. L. M. Packard, the bronze trophy, with a score of 260. A. B. Douglas, admittedly the best marksman in the club, was barred from the contest, as he had won the club medal previously offered.

The conditions were thirty shots per man at fifty yards on the standard American target. Considering the changing light, the scores made were very satisfactory. On Sunday, June 6, another ten-man telegraph match will be shot with the Smith & Wesson Club of Springfield, Mass., the distance to be at fifty yards. The scores yesterday were as follows:

LOTS OF FUN.

RUBBER MEN GENIAL HOSTS.

ENTERTAIN ROYALLY FOR LARGE CROWD OF GUESTS.

Night and a Day on the Magic Isle Is Entrancing for Two Hundred and Fifty Who Enjoyed the Unique Programme—Something Doing All the Time.

One of the best picnics the Rubber Men ever gave was the verdict of all those who enjoyed the outing yesterday at Catalina.

Tire and accessory men proved excellent hosts at the Rubber Men's picnic at Catalina Island. There were 250 jolly picnickers who crossed the channel. The boat arrived Saturday night and there was a warm supper ready for all. This was only the beginning of a round of enjoyment which lasted until last night at eleven o'clock when the tired but happy wanderers returned.

There was an entertainment at the public hall Saturday night that was appreciated by the large audience which showed its enthusiasm in a noisy burst of good feeling. Ed Tiebault was a howling success in monologue. "Cap" Jargstorff sang so well and worked so hard that he was presented with a handsome gold watch.

W. D. Newerf, Phil Lyon, F. O. Nelson, E. A. Featherstone, and others helped everybody to have a good time. There was hardly an hour for sleep during the entire stay on the Magic Isle.

With breakfast over yesterday morning the programme was begun. At 10 o'clock two boatloads of autoists, accessory and tire men, were taken to Camp Banning where a baseball game between the Rubber and the Automobile men had been arranged. It was exciting.

H. O. Harrison went into the box for the automobile men and pitched five good innings. He held the Rubber men down to four tallies while his team scored a total of nine runs. Then Harrison went into the air and his place was taken by Lester Patee, who failed to improve matters. The autoists went into the air long enough to lose them the game.

When it was too late Glen Lull went into the box for the autoists and pitched two no-run innings. The Rubber men had gained too great a handicap, however, as Carl Newerf, in the box, was pitching like a veteran. The game ended in favor of the Rubber men by a score of twenty to fifteen. John T. Bill and Harry Mason were the umpires.

When the game was over a barbecue dinner was served on long tables. Here "Cap" Jargstorff again made a hit. Everything was carried to a splendid conclusion and there was plenty to eat.

In the afternoon fishermen hauled in a long seine which was loaded with fish. The run back to Avalon was made at dusk and the special boat left Catalina at 8:30 o'clock for San Pedro and home.

HARD HITTING GAME.

EDISONS BEAT ATHLETICS.

The Edison baseball team defeated the Los Angeles Athletic Club nine yesterday afternoon by the score of 13 to 9, at Athletic Park.

It was a slugging match from the start, each side making thirteen hits. Stoll of the Edisons fanned ten men, was hit thirteen times and walked two. Hapgood was taken out during the eighth inning after being touched up for twelve hits and passing one and striking out one. Killfelt took his place. Score:

At the Churches Yesterday.

"Fiendish Crimes."

AT THE First Baptist Church yesterday, Rev. J. Q. A. Henry preached a sermon on "Fiendish Crimes," taking as his text the tragic death of little Anna Poltera, who was murdered last week in Griffith Park. He said:

"The mark of Cain is still upon the race. Murder is contemporaneous with every age. Ghastly crimes continue to blot the pages of history. With all our boasted progress, we have been powerless to eliminate the spirit of brutality and hate. No crime has ever shocked this community more than the brutal outrage and hellish murder of Anna Poltera. No word can describe the horror we all feel and no vengeance that could be wracked upon the perpetrator of this diabolical deed, would avenge the innocence violated on the little life destroyed. If the murderer is discovered may God have mercy on his soul, for there is real peril that his body may be torn to pieces by an outraged public. This fiendish crime finds its counterpart in the ravages of drink, the slaughter of the innocents in all ages by vice and crime; the persecutions of the papacy, the scourge of Turkey, the sword of the Moslem, the atrocities in Armenia, the assassination of Poland, and the crucifixion of Christ.

"There is a hell in every heart; and a blood thirsty tiger in every soul. Every nation has its cock-pit, where rape, murder, suicide, rapine, bestiality, drunkenness and debauchery hold high carnival. One prolific cause of such infernal cruelty is found in the unregulated and evil passions of man—ofttimes set on fire of hell by strong drink and salacious reading. Then our estimates of life are too cheap. The price we put on purity is often paltry. We legislate to protect the fish of the sea and the birds of the air, with far more concern and success than we do to defend the home, protect the innocency of childhood, the nobility of womanhood, or the dignity of manhood.

"Frequently our police protection is inadequate, our custodians of the law are corrupt, our clean citizens are indifferent, our courts are responsible for the delay, or miscarriage of justice, and the whole administration of government in the hands of a horde of vultures, political parasites and moral monsters. The human heart is deceitful above all things and desperately wicked. This wicked heart explains it all.

"Sin is a hideous reality, moral obliquity is a revolting fact. The devil is a terrible tyrant, his rule is written in human blood. The biggest, blackest, ugliest fact of life is sin. Not a mere negative of the good, but a positive, ferocious, damnable and self propagating power, so pitiless, so murderous, and so mighty that it requires the conquering and cleansing energy of the blood of Calvary's cross to subdue its strength, curb its passion, dethrone its master and save its victim from outbreaking and scandalous sin.

"Can any one possessing intellectual and moral sanity read the simple record of Anna Poltera's vicious assault, fiendish ghoulish mutilation, and murder, and still deny the awful reality of sin, suffering and death? Impossible! And the effort to school the race in such moral juggiery gives the lie to history, insults the deepest experience of the soul, contravenes the plain teaching of scripture and is a libel on the love of God which gave Christ to the cross to put away sin and abolish death."

Christianity and Other Faiths.

"Christianity and Other Faiths" was the subject of Rev. William H. Day at the First Congregational Church, yesterday. The text was: "He made of one every nation of men." (Acts xvii-26.)

"The apostle," he said, "dreamed of a united humanity, based upon the universal religion of Christ. That dream has fired the heroic heart of the missionaries of the church through sixty generations. The hope of a racial brotherhood burns in waiting souls in all parts of the non-Christian world. In the search for a world faith do we find in Jesus Christ him that should come, or look we for another?

"The new universal religion must be a growing tree, not a wood pile of sticks from dead trees. It must have roots extending far out in all directions in the rich past and branches ever spreading till they cast their cooling shadows over the furthermost fevered need of humanity.

"Christianity because of its power of assimilation, is becoming universal. Our religion is like a tree with its roots reaching down through Judaism, into the ancient faith of the Semitic peoples and through Israel's contact with Persia during the days of captivity into the faith of Iram. No less clearly has its roots through the Hellenism of Galilee and St. Paul back into the thought of Greece and thus has incorporated into its life the best and noblest of religious conceptions to be drawn out of religious strata of human experience, Aryan and Semitic. In it are found the reverence of Judaism, the freedom of Hellenism, the moral earnestness of Zarathustra, the mysticism of Brahmanism, the sacrificial spirit of Buddahism.

"But not only because the faith of Christ includes all the best of other religions, but because it exceeds all others, may we expect it to become universal. Timid persons have often feared what we call the study of comparative religions, but as has been so beautifully suggested, the Kohinoor placed beside the lesser diamond, neither renders the latter valueless, nor does it lower its own dignity. Wherever Christianity has been brought in close contact with the thinking men of other faiths, it has always exerted a sharply purifying influence. It has either caused them to accept it, or has sent them back to their own faith, judging it and modifying it according to the standards of Christ.

"The most fundamental fact, which distinguishes Christianity from all other faiths, is its insistence upon personality. The infinite Father God is personal, not a blind force, or an abstract principle. He has declared Himself to men by the unrivaled personality to whom all men are beginning to turn.

"After 1900 years of testing, during which Christ's religion has been put in competition with that of every other people, we come back to a fuller realization of the imperative obligation that is laid upon us to recognise the glorious fact that a universal humanity can find its unity—its brotherhood—only as it yields allegiance to the universal faith, and furthermore, that to us has been committed the extending of that faith until all shall be drawn to Him, who was lifted up upon the cross, glorified in death, and is the risen Lord of mankind."

Beam and Splinter.

Rev. J. Horace Mallows preached on "The Beam and the Splinter" at Plymouth Congregational Church, yesterday. His text was: "Thou hypocrite, cast out first the beam out of thine own eye; and then shalt thou see clearly to cast out the splinter out of thy brother's eye." In developing his theme, the speaker said:

"He who desires to truly reform his brother must himself be good. The severest condemnation of wrongdoing in others comes more from a clean life than the fiercest invective. The sins of men call for reproof but the reprover must not be the greater sinner.

"He who starts out today in the reform movement must be pure and eyes of the unsympathetic will be upon him, and he will have to undergo the most rigid and merciless investigation. If his hands are tainted and his motives selfish, short work will be made of him. No one could find a sin in Jesus; back of His flaming words stood His peerless and spotless life; this constituted Him the reformer that He was, and wickedness slunk away from His burning presence.

"The right road to reform is to begin at home. Weed your own garden, cleanse your own life, have your own eye clear and unclouded and then go forth into the world with a light shining before men who will see your good works—not words—and glorify your Father which is in heaven.

"Application of this principle can be made to churches and denominations. How ready one is to find fault and condemn the shortcomings of a sister church! The more uncharitable and loveless we are, the greater the sins appear of our rival denomination. The greater the beam in our own eye, the surer we are right and the others wrong. The less goodness we have the greater is our spirit of censoriousness.

"This principle also applies to nations. How apparent is the weakness of another country! Its splinters become beams to our eyes. How free our criticisms of the internal condition of Russia, of Turkey! How plain to us the mistakes of England!

"Does it ever occur to us that we allow plague spots at home? How about our abominable lynchings, our corrupt civic government, our unholy combines, our San Franciscos and Pittsburghs?

"First cast out the beam out of thine own eye; first make America the cleanest, best governed, purest, happiest country in the world and then thou canst better aid other nations in the path of progress."

The True Orthodoxy.

Yesterday morning, Rev. C. C. Pierce, at the Memorial Baptist Church, preached on "The True Orthodoxy," taking for his text words from the gospel of John: "A new commandment give I unto you. If ye love me, keep my commandments."—John xiii, 34, and xiv, 15. He said, during the course of his sermon:

"These words give us, as well as any isolated text can possibly do, the keynote to the orthodoxy of Jesus. This is the standard of Christ, and there is no other real standard. Paul's commentary on this, given in the thirteenth chapter of I. Corinthians, shows the absolute supremacy of love over every other thing which belongs to the life of the Christian and the church. So far as I am concerned, there is nothing else for me to do but to look back of all speculation, all theorizing and all schemes by which selfish men have sought to find an easy way into heaven, to find the very truth which Jesus taught. When I do this, I find one great command, 'Love,' and one vast programme 'Service.'

"The church will triumph and achieve that for which it was organized just so far as it inculcates and practices the doctrine of love for all men, and this must be world-wide in its expression. The church is coming to recognize this today as never before. The missionary activities of the present comprise one of the most remarkable movements of all time. But the potency of a great love born in human hearts is not only manifested by those who perform a spectacular service on some mission field, but is manifested in thousands of homes in this city today, where toiling mothers and faithful fathers are seeking day by day to bear the heavy burdens of life in a noble and uncomplaining manner.

"But we need and must have more of this love, and we must seek for fields in which to manifest it. Some of the energy which is now used in amassing vast fortunes must be given to cultivating human character, and uprooting that which defeats the evident purposes of God.

"Where is our love for Christ and those little ones with whom He identifies Himself in the presence of the frightful wrongs of child labor in this country? Where is the love of Christian England, and Christian Germany this minute, when they are engaged in a mad race to see which can possess the greatest number of pieces of mechanism, wrung from the poverty of the people, for the purpose of butchering each other?

"There is a light which shines even through the bushels which cover it, there is a love which will not die, but which breaking through the rubbish which ofttimes well-nigh throttles it, will lead the world into the kingdom of God."

The Permanent in Religion.

In a sermon on "The Permanent and the Transient in Religion" at the First Unitarian Church, yesterday morning, Rev. E. Stanton Hodgin said:

"The permanent are the vital things of life—things that are intangible and that seem at first sight to be least permanent. Civilization is such an intangible, vital force that passes down through time. It cannot be reduced to fixity. We cannot even define it with any degree of satisfaction. We can only point to certain things as evidence of it. People have endeavored to stop this stream of civilization and fix it—give it permanent form which they could control—but in vain. The ancient Egyptians thought they could fix their civilization in solid rock so it would remain forever. It escaped them, as the spirit leaves the dying body, and the pyramids remain not a monument to their wisdom but to their folly.

"A man was filled with ecstacy by the song of the skylark. He vowed he would possess the bird. He trapped it and held it in his hand, but found he possessed only a fluttering mass of flesh and blood. The thing he wanted, the song, that which expressed the soul of the bird, was gone and could never be brought back. The finer and better things of life invariably escape us when we try to possess them in this vulgar way.

"The people who have tried to grasp religion—tried to reduce it to a tangible possession—have had the same experience as the man with the bird. The thing they longed for has escaped them. The fixed creed and the inelastic institution are the remains of such futile attempts. Like the pyramids of Egypt, they may be imposing but the breath of life is not in them.

"A piece of ice seems much more permanent and real than water vapor. One can handle it, see it, and measure it. It appeals to all the senses. But water vapor and liquid, while making much less of an appeal to the senses, are much more normal and real. It is in these forms that water does its work and fills its place in the world. Ice is the temporary form that water takes when it ceases to be vital, or to perform any function.

"A religion of fixed creeds, or forms is congealed religion. It appeals powerfully to the senses. It seems like a permanent reality. It is the permanency of the monument that has no vitality in it. The only permanent and vital religion is that which is unconscious, which circulates in the veins and arteries of human society every hour of every day, filling people with pure desires and noble aspirations."

Peace Conferences Useless.

LOS ANGELES, May 23.—[To the Editor of The Times:] From time to time we have had peace conferences, all making for the one purpose, the limitations of the armaments of the nations. The recent session at Mohonk Lake is probably as earnest in this direction as any. They are all good people and well meaning, seeking to stop war and make for a court of arbitration. But their efforts will be wholly unavailing. They may have conferences every year, every week, if they please, but they will never by this means stop the nations arming to the teeth. The building of Dreadnoughts will go on, armies will be multiplied, better organized and equipped with better weapons of war. Each nation will seek to outdo the other with every new invention for the destruction of his opponent.

God's will and purpose must be fulfilled. The restoration of Israel to the promised land, and until this is accomplished no court of arbitration will sit to govern this world. All these war scares, such as Japan versus United States, Germany versus England, are preparing these nations for the final struggle, and are in a line of God's purpose for the restoration of Israel—his promise to faithful Abraham. The equipment of all nations for war will go on irrespective of all peace conferences and will increase greater and greater each year until the great final struggle will come outside Jerusalem for the possession of the land God promised to Abraham and his descendants. "And when ye shall see Jerusalem compassed with armies, then know that the desolation thereof is nigh." "And Jacob said unto Joseph, God Almighty appeared unto me at Luz, in the land of Canaan, and blessed me, and said unto me, Behold, I will make thee fruitful, and multiply thee, and I will make of thee a multitude of people, and will give this land to thy seed after thee for an everlasting possession."—Genesis xlviii, 3-4. Again, Amos ix, 15: "And I will plant them (Israel) upon their land, and they shall no more be pulled up out of their land, which I have given them, saith the Lord thy God."

Here we have the distinct promise of God to restore the land of Canaan to Israel and this shall be done only by the sword. The Turk, who has held that promised land, Canaan, and the Holy City, Jerusalem, for 1200 years, is not the descendant of faithful Abraham, and it will be wrested from him by the sword in probably about twenty-five years from now. I believe ancient Israel to be found in the Saxon race.

Market Stalls.

LOS ANGELES, May 23.—[To the Editor of The Times:] I have been here about a dozen times since 1889, and have observed carefully the improvements going. But how is it that such a city as this one has not put a series of contiguous markets where meat, fish, vegetables, fruits and notions would be sold? New Orleans has such a series of markets in different parts of the city, and every two years sells their lease to public bidders for over $200,000, the lessees collecting daily the stall rents, that range from 50 cents to $1.50, and more per day, while they pay mostly in advance in cash. The city owns all these public markets, and has had most of them built by private parties on their private grounds, from one to four contiguous blocks, with the agreement that at the end of twenty-five years the markets should revert to the city in full ownership, while the owners would be entitled to collect daily stall rentals from their occupants, and besides pay regular State and city licenses and taxes.

From a sanitary standpoint the death smell of carcasses as we pass by the present butcher shops would be eliminated. This would open up employment as in New Orleans for 500 butchers, and three or four times more for other kinds of business, and place such a market or markets where their atmosphere would not contaminate the air of the city. The markets of New Orleans are under the sanitary control of the City Board of Health, and are kept scrupulously clean. They open up at 3 o'clock a.m., and close at 12 m. sharp.

The meats we eat here, as well as all other vegetables that are saturated with the stench of the asphalt pavement and the dust of the streets, surely call for some improvement. I was a member of the City Council of New Orleans for four years, and know how eager and lively the bidders were, and how the city found it profitable to so lease its markets.

FACTS, FEATURES AND FANCIES FOR WOMEN.

BY MISS SYDNEY FORD.

I went to a woman's club the other day to hear dress discussed. The speaker took as her topic, "Clothes—the Paramount Issue—After All," and the president announced that the subject would be treated with startling frankness.

The speaker observed in the outset that whereas the truism "figures never lie" might hold good in mathematics it did not apply to woman, as the corset forms and the dress con-forms, and style is the great leveler, especially today when it comes to hips. She said that women, as a class, are groupies, yes, actually, sheeplike so far as following the dictates of Dame Fashion is concerned. Like Ruth of old, they murmur, "Where thou goest I will go." She said that most women, so far as their clothes are concerned, look either like a caricature or a character. She then depicted graphically the various types of women—the unhooked and ungroomed, the fluffy ruffles, the tailored model, the classic style, and the stout woman who sways a waist line which is lost in the vicinity of her armpits, and who looks not only dressed up, but dressed up. The conclusion of her address was a clever little skit on last year's sleeves, and the point and moral of the whole was that a woman invariably shows her character and her mental poise by her clothes and the way she wears them.

What Is a Hat Old?

The second speaker took up the latter question, "When Is a Hat Old?" She harked back to the days when men wore bonnets and paused to pay her respects to the masculine hat which she declared expresses much more than a womans' hat. When he tosses it in the air it means applause, for instance; when he pulls it over his eyes it means a perturbed condition of the mind, and when he wears it on the back of his head it indicates positive abandonment. She referred to the habit of Englishmen in not removing their hats, and told a little anecdote of the present King of England when he was yet the Prince of Wales, and went behind the scenes to meet with Mme. Bernhardt between acts, but did not remove his hat. He did not remove his hat. He the divine Sarah reproved him by saying in soft, sweet tones: "The Prince is permitted to wear his crown but never his hat."

Coming down to the present age of millinery when the average hat is no longer a dream, but a nightmare, the speaker told her experience in seeking information as to when a hat is really considered old. She had consulted the best authorities on millinery in local circles. One clever woman said the hat is old when it dies within itself and loses its interior, ecclesiastical opinion was that it rested entirely upon the woman who wore the hat. A man made brutally plain "like a woman, a hat is old when it loses its shape," and an Englishman looked amused when the question was put to her and asked, "Is that a riddle?"

One resourceful woman said that she always made one hat do for the four seasons by getting a shape that she could revolve around her head, and when the hat had made a complete revolution—its four sides appearing in front—she considered it old. The most sensible reply was the answer of a practical woman, "When I can afford a new one." The one hat that is absolutely immortal as possible is the peerless Gainsborough.

How Design Them.

In regard to present fashions in hats a member, in reply to the query, "What hath it?" drew attention to the significant fact that our hats are designed by men—as a rule—but admitted a striking exception, which resulted in a local millinery tragedy. Some leading buyer went to New York and brought back a stock of large-crowned, large-brimmed hats. The buyer of a rival house went to New York and brought back a supply of small hats, and the eventual result was that the high hat became a drug on the market. All this came about because a very beautiful and equally independent Parisian beauty took it into her pretty head that she preferred a hat that is a high one, and she, accordingly, designed one and wore it. Her charming appearance so attracted the admiration of Paris women that forthwith forsook high-crowned hats designed for them by the men dictators of fashion and, presto, every fashionable woman in Paris donned a small hat and discarded the others.

Millinery Morals.

The speaker touched on millinery ethics with the pertinent question, "How can a milliner be honest and sell the hats of the vintage of 1909?" Can she honestly assure her customers that these monstrosities are beautiful and becoming? All hats of the present day are divided into two distinct classes—the indigenous and the exotic imposed. To the former belong the toques and turbans, which Queen Alexandra so favors, and all the other shapes and sizes belong to the exotic imposed class of headgear. The grotesque hat is an error," declared the speaker, lapsing for a moment into the language of the Christian Scientist, "and talking through a hat is no longer slang, but philosophy."

An after discussion of the subject of the effect of hats as indicators of character gave emphasis to the remark of the witty president of the club who said when she introduced the speaker: "Hats are traitors proclaiming the traits of those who wear them with malicious frankness."

Some Wise Women.

Mrs. Ellen M. Richards, instructor in the department of chemistry at the Massachusetts Institute of Technology, has accepted a call to lecture in the summer school of the University of California. She comes in June, and will give a course of lectures on household economics.

Women who visit the Seattle exposition this summer will be interested to know that a woman, Mrs. H. R. Tucker, of Spokane, said to be the first woman wireless telegrapher in the world, is in charge of the station on the steamship Indianapolis, plying between Seattle and Tacoma. Speaking of her telegraphy as a business for women, Mrs. Tucker said that the only reason she could think of why women do not go into this service is that they are afraid of the instruments. "Now, there is nothing about wireless that I couldn't do," Mrs. Tucker said. "I understand the instruments and am my own electrician. Of course, if an aerial should blown down, I wouldn't very well climb the mast to fix it. That is about the only thing I would hesitate to do. I like the system. It offers an excellent field for women operators."

Ears Must Go.

"Give me a pair of French ears," said a customer, walking into the rooms of a beauty culturist.

"I beg pardon," said a new assistant.

"That's all right," interrupted Madam. "Have you a pair of ears with you?" turning to the customer, who replied: "Yes, but I'm afraid they're worn out," as she opened her pigskin bag and took out two pink velvet ears caught together with a strip of pink velvet ribbon.

"You see they are pretty well worn," she said, "though the jewels are good."

The beauty culturist took the ears, smoothed them carefully and slipped them over the young woman's ears, stood them out in perky fashion and secured them in place with loops of hair so arranged that the pink ears were partly hidden, and nothing but the lobes of the real ears showed.

"I have many requests for French ears," confided Madam to the New York Sun writer, who tells the story. "Real ears are out of date now, you know, because nine-tenths of them are defective in shape and hiding defects is part of our business. The hats of today have made ears impossible, for a basket hat looks as if it rested on the ears as though they were brackets—hence they must be hidden or disguised. Unless they are perfect in shape they must not show—except the tiniest glimpse of the lobe—if it's pink, and if it isn't you must tint it.

"Helen of Troy was fortunate for she could wear two bits of gold lattice over her ears. Her jeweler doubtless made them for her, and they were of fine gold wire so adjusted that they set off her coiffure and at the same time concealed her ears. You have seen them in her pictures, those classic ear blinkers, one at each side of her head.

"The women of today cannot put blinkers on her ears, though she would be glad if she could. Instead of wearing gold ear shields she must resort to other devices—to coverings of velvet and silk, to sprays of flowers and curls of hair and to bows of gilt wire."

Fads and Frills.

A gay Beau Brummel frill at the throat transforms the tailored suit into something very dainty and feminine.

Sleeveless coats with a color contrasting with the gown under them are growing favor as the season advances.

The coarser weaves of tussore, which have the preference just now, look at a distance like a piece of rough canvas.

It is not the woman who spends the most money who looks best, but the woman who knows her type and dresses to suit it.

Some extremely smart hats are trimmed with really wonderful natural nasturtiums. They are a great favorite at present.

One of the oddities of the season is the introduction of the metallic and spangle effects among the cottons and linens.

Among the popular fabrics are the new two-tone changeable satins, the face being of one color and the back of another.

Flesh-color stockings and gloves are to be had and are particularly effective for mid-summer wear with the lingerie frock.

Whatever their shape, coats are straight of line, slab style at the back, and show never a curve except at the armhole.

Collars of fine linen, hand-embroidered, are sheer enough for the fine frocks, and suitable also for the heavy linens and pongees.

A Woman About Town.

BY FELICIA.

Now that Mrs. Robert J. Burdette, indefatigable builder of buildings, is temporarily on the retired list, the story of the stately structure which is to house Barker Brothers' Furniture Company, and which is to be known as the "Clara Burdette Building," has come to light.

"Deliver us from the canker of suspended judgment," is the prayer in a recent magazine. It is one for which the little lady of "Sunnycrest" needs not to pray, for she gave the deciding vote to build that $90,000 building, and made up her mind in thirty minutes by the clock.

The majority of people would have left the matter on the "lap of the gods" for at least a week, and would have gone far from the madding crowd to get light on it at last, but the "Clara Burdette Building" was decided upon in the midst of preparations for the entertainment of 1000 guests on the anniversary of the day when Mrs. Burdette wedded the "immortal Bob."

Fourteen extra menials were at work adorning Sunnycrest. Ivy was going up, rugs were going down. There was bustle, there was stir, and the eyes of the little mistress were in every place beholding the evil and the good.

The evil included a certain son of a Samurai who was wielding a broom on the front porch and leaving an unmistakable trail of dust in his wake. As suddenly as the summer lightning plays about Fujiyama, the broom was taken from his limp grasp, and the little lady with the red-gold hair was sweeping in his stead.

Two men appeared in the driveway, and ascended the steps. They approached the sweeper, and asked to speak to Mrs. Burdette. "I can't talk to you now, I haven't a minute to spare," and the sweeper continued to sweep, with the Jap in a trance near-by. But the men were game, and held to their point in spite of being ignored in the maelstrom of gladsome preparation.

"This is very pressing, Mrs. Burdette, we came about that building."

"You must excuse me, gentlemen, I cannot talk now, I must sweep this porch and I am entertaining this afternoon."

"But this option expires at 3 o'clock."

"Option, 3 o'clock," the broom stopped, no one likes to think of an opportunity gone by forever. Something was thrust at the astonished Jap, and he saw his taskmistress disappear through the doorway accompanied by the intruders.

In exactly thirty minutes they emerged. Papers had been signed and the "Clara Burdette Building" was assured.

Then the sweeping began again.

"We got a moon yet, ain't it?"

Joseph W. Folk, the incorruptible and non-bribable hero of Tweed days in St. Louis, and now national character, stopped, started as he was entering his hotel last evening in Los Angeles, halted by the above war cry from the past which saluted his ears.

"Why, you old sinner," he said, as he grabbed the outstretched hand of "When did you leave St. Louis? I haven't seen you since the gas-lamp days."

Then followed a heart to heart talk, for the immortal saying about the moon is as good as a Masonic grip to old-time St. Louisans, and opens the flood gates of reminiscence.

"Why, Lord, don't you remember," said another St. Louis man, now claiming citizenship in God's country, and a little crowd gathered in the lobby of the hotel to listen. "Don't you know when beer-drinking "Onkle Henry Ziegenhein" was Mayor of St. Louis, things were at a desperate pass? Some boodling Councilman actually got gas lamps substituted for the electric lights over the city—gas lamps, with a lamplighter going round at dark."

"The electric-lighting contract ran out before they got all of those blooming gas lamps put up, and part of the city was in total darkness; people even hung out lanterns to light the neighborhoods. Finally some indignant fellow went to the Mayor about the matter, and 'Onkle Henry' pointed majestically to the great hollow harvest moon in the sky, and said 'We got a moon yet, ain't it?'

"It was the last straw to an outraged public. That fall Joe Folk was made Prosecuting Attorney, and things began to happen. That saying was repeated all over the United States to show how bad things were with us, and I even heard a fellow telling about it at Monte Carlo, the next summer."

Ha, Sir Knights! Behold Don Quixote Pritchard and Sancho Panza Warner tilting against the modern windmill—the advertising poster! These gentle knights are artists of ability. Walter Pritchard has transferred to canvas the elusive beauty and mystery of the mighty deep, and Warner is his chief aide in the making of pictures, and in the serving of pink tea to society at their picturesque studio in Pasadena.

Alas, when their deed of prowess is noised abroad, they shall no more be known as the painters of pictures. Their talents will be engaged by the promoters of civic beauty campaigns, or their dramatic ability (or unlimited nerves as one pleases to view it) will be the means of placing their names in the hall of fame.

It happened in this wise: These artist souls have been in a state of rebellion for some time against the great advertising billboards, which deface fair Nature between Los Angeles and Pasadena.

"We will put a stop to this iniquitous practice," they declared.

Now artists are proverbially penniless; but when Walter Pritchard entered one of the leading clothing stores last week, his personality exuded importance; his critical air spelled not only unlimited wealth, but ancient lineage, and patronage unlimited revealed itself to the clerks as they hastened to do the bidding of this customer of consequence.

The best was brought forth from the shelves, for the gentleman had said that his tailor did not have time to complete certain garments, so he would be obliged to purchase them from a shop. "Surely that manly form had never been contaminated by the touch of a hand-me-down!" and the heads of the clothing-house drew near and superintended the clerks in the search for the superfine garments to humor his taste.

Selections were made, and business was progressing, when suddenly Warner appeared, and beholding his friend Pritchard, rushed up, and said, in dramatic manner:

"Pritchard, what are you doing in this place?" as though the salvation of his soul had been imperiled, or his good taste impugned.

"My tailor," began Pritchard, unfolding the apologetic explanation that had so worked on the clothing clerks. His friend was not appeased.

"Pritchard," he fairly shrieked, "do you not know that this firm advertises on those infamous billboards that have so offended you on the way to Pasadena? Remember what you have sworn about them!"

My, how the leading man in a melodrama would envy the artist's sudden righteous wrath! He stormed, and with the majesty of a duke or an earl pronouncing sentence on a poor devil of a shopkeeper, he said:

"I will never deal with a firm which resorts to such evil methods to curry favor. I shall take my patronage elsewhere."

Now, this is a true tale, and for two solid hours of that afternoon, these two artists took unholy joy in repeating this vaudeville stunt in shops of various kinds. Jewelry was selected, rings were all but bought, and the almost unbelievable part about it is that they were successful in every instance—not in banishing the posters, the thief actors had such a good time acting before the thing was over that they almost forgot about the posters, but their acting passed for the real thing every time.

A lullaby written for a Los Angeles baby will be sung this July at the American embassy in Berlin by the composer, Mrs. Gertrude Ross Harris. The lullaby is made of loving words and a quaint little air crooned by the musical mother as she rocked Miss Baby to sleep in the sweet old-fashioned way. It made a hit right off with little Corinne Ross, and as all tender simple things are great, it will surely make a hit with the American Ambassador and his wife.

Mrs. Harris, who is now touring the continent, will go to Berlin July 1, to visit her cousin, Frau Emma Ross Mueller, an American girl who married in Germany, and who made her debut as an opera singer two years ago at the winter carnival in Venice.

"Frau Nightingale," as she is called, is a friend of the Hills, and they have invited her and the Los Angeles cousin to sing for them some evening at the embassy.

"Sing? why, what shall I sing?" Mrs. Harris wrote to her cousin in some trepidation. "Shall I sing the German songs I have been studying?"

"Sing your own little lullaby," was the reply. "It came straight from your heart. It will reach the hearts of others, I know."

"I hope it will not put my audience to sleep, as it does the baby," wrote Mrs. Harris to Frau Nightingale.

A certain good looking Benedict of Pasadena wore a quizzical smile the other day when I met him on the street. He had just played the leading part in a human interest drama, entitled:

"One touch of nature makes the whole world kin." The only other actor was a colored brother, a former bootblack who had bettered his fortunes by marrying the daughter of the well-to-do Bob Owens of this city.

Now, a year or two ago this Pasadena friend of mine married a girl with a million or so dollars, some of it safely salted away in Los Angeles real estate. He has failed to fulfill the prediction of becoming the dilettant "Pasadena husband," but has managed his wife's property with signal ability. A short time ago he decided to clear a certain tract of land, and the tenants were duly given notice to vacate. They promptly departed, with the exception of the former bootblack, who was living on the property, and who decided that he would like to become a permanent fixture. Repeated warnings failed to move him away, and finally the Pasadena man went out in person to "kick the black fellow off the place."

He arrived upon the scene per automobile, the very quintessence of money and "class," and proceeded to uncork the vials of his wrath in choice millionaire invective. At the first pause the blow fell. The former bootblack grinned goodnaturedly and drawled out:

"Now, Mr. Mac, don't you come talkin' to me like dat; why, man, I mar-

PASADENA.

TAKES CHARGE OF GREAT WORK.

EDISON MAN WILL HANDLE BIG NORTHERN ENTERPRISE.

H. H. Sinclair to Go to San Francisco as General Manager of the Great Western Power Company. Lad Dragged from Saddle by Angry Steer.

Office of The Times, No. 37 S. Raymond Ave

PASADENA, May 24.—H. H. Sinclair, vice-president and director of the Edison Electric Company, and director in other large Southern California corporations, will take entire charge of the Great Western Power Company of San Francisco on June 1, as vice-president and general manager. He will leave Pasadena to make his permanent home in the bay city, but has no intention of selling his beautiful residence on Orange Grove boulevard. His wife and family will remain here during the summer.

The head office of the Great Western Power Company is in New York. Edwin Hawley, first vice-president of the Western Pacific and president of the Iowa Central, the Cloverleaf and of the Norfolk and Western railroads, is president of the corporation Sinclair is to represent on this Coast.

About $8,000,000 has thus far been invested by this power company; $2,000,000 will be expended in the next two years, and the ultimate improvements planned will represent an investment of $25,000,000.

Mr. Sinclair, who is authority for these statements, was seen at his home yesterday afternoon. "I am reluctant to leave Southern California, where I have lived twenty-two years," he said, "but I can hardly refuse to take up a task that has such wonderful developments ahead of it. In undertaking this work I cannot but appreciate the possibilities of California as a manufacturing center. This company is building for the future, and within ten years it will be equipped to supply 500,000 horse power where it is now supplying 60,000. See what has been accomplished in Southern California in the development of manufacturing industries as the result of cheap electrical power. I tell you that electrical power is the biggest business of the future today, and California, with its wonderful resources for power, is to become the loom of the future and the storehouse of all Western America.

"The Great Western Power Company has closed a contract with the Southern Pacific to furnish power for the operation of all the suburban lines of that company about San Francisco, such as the broad-gauge and its Alameda lines, and it is only a short matter of time until all railroads will discard the locomotive and place motormen in the cab windows of engineers."

This company has just completed its first power installment, a 60,000-horse-power plant at Big Bend, twelve miles above Oroville, on the Feather River. The extent of the plant can best be shown by the fact that it generates enough power to light 1,000,000 sixteen-candlepower lights. The Edison Electric Company, with a capacity of 40,000 horsepower, supplies about one-half the electric lighting power of Los Angeles, and furnishes twenty-four towns and cities besides. The Feather River plant is the largest in the United States outside of the Niagara Falls companies, and has the largest turbines west of Niagara. There are four units of 15,000 horsepower each, operated under a 1,250-foot head. At present the company has a 180-mile transmission line, feeding Oroville, Marysville, Sacramento and Oakland, and is under contract to supply 30,000 horsepower to the company that lights San Francisco.

This fall a dam to cost $800,000 and which it will take two years to build, will be started on the Feather River. No work can be done on the dam during the high water of the winter season. Plans are also being prepared, says Sinclair, which will create one of the largest reservoirs in the world, but this work will not be undertaken for three years.

Mr. and Mrs. Sinclair are to be hosts of a ball to be given at the Valley Hunt Club this evening, and his friends construe the affair as a farewell to Mr. Sinclair, who was the last president of the club and who has been prominent socially during his long residence here.

Sinclair lived for fifteen years in Redlands and installed the first multiphase transmission plant in the United States and the second in the world, there in 1892. He has been with the Edison Company since its conception and is largely responsible for its successes.

DRAGGED FROM SADDLE.

Ferdinand Pierient, 20 years old, with cowboy aspirations, was dragged from his saddle by an angry steer in Altadena yesterday afternoon and had his arm broken. The youth roped the steer on Calabasas street and the animal broke for an open field, launching Pierient on an exciting flight through the air, which landed him on the hard sandstone road. He was brought to the Receiving Hospital of the Police Station for treatment.

PLEDGED SECRECY.

Waterhouse supporters, representing the opposition to municipal ownership of water, pledged themselves to secrecy in regard to their committee meeting, which took place at No. 100 East Colorado street Saturday night. Edmund D. Barry, who acted as chairman in the absence of M. H. Weight and who called the meeting, was alone invested with power to give out information. Barry flatly refused to give out anything beyond the fact that the meeting was called.

There were only about ten of the twenty-two appointed by the Mayor present. No extended discussion of the question of municipal ownership of water was entered into. It was the consensus of opinion of those present that something should be done toward that end, but that the matter of the title to the water should first be settled in court.

A preliminary committee of five was appointed to formulate an answer to Mayor Earley's letter and to recommend two men to be appointed to serve on the Mayor's final committee of five. Edmund D. Barry is chairman of this committee and will submit his report to the Mayor today or tomorrow. The meeting adjourned subject to Barry's call.

SORORITY DANCE.

The Shakespeare Clubhouse was the scene of a gay festivity, Saturday evening, when the Phi Alpha Sigma Sorority of Throop Institute gave its annual dance.

Papyrus and bamboo were used most effectively in decoration of the ballroom, where a Japanese motif was carried out by the use of gay Japanese umbrellas and quaint Japanese lanterns. Tall grasses and bright geraniums filled in corners and from the beamed ceilings were suspended colored lanterns which swung low over the heads of the dancers. Red predominated everywhere, in compliment to the many Stanford students present.

During intermissions in the dancing, refreshments were served in the tea-room, which was decorated with Shirley poppies.

Among those chaperoning the affair were: Mmes. Thomas Earley, Mathew Slavin, Ernest B. Hoag, W. H. Smith and J. O. McClament. The hostesses were Misses Frances Kendall, Sara Slavin, Harriet Judd, Minnie Haase, Bess Wilson, Harriet Tabor, Marcia Graves, Madeline Harris, Clara Nash, Grace Fisher, Lucy Smith, Rose Lippincott, Emma Robbins, Shirley Burns, Laura Bradley, active members and the alumnae, Misses Alice Earley, Kate Smith, Chita Kraft, Gladys Barndollar, Adeline Wright, Ruth Gaylord, Pearl Fisher, Margaret Mears, Mabel Heath, Marion Hamilton, Ethel Davenport, Louise Gatch, Grace Wright, Lucile Culver, Elizabeth Woodville, Serena Bland, Elizabeth Edmund, Lillian Grant, Elizabeth Sergeant, Lucretia Tomlinson, Mary Potter, Grace Waldron, Helen Sickler, Virginia Pease, Helene Fitzgerald, Florence Doolittle, Grace Davenport, Nettie Nickle and Grace Dickinson.

Mrs. George C. Horton of North Madison avenue entertained Saturday with an al fresco afternoon tea, and was assisted by her daughter, Miss Marion Horton, who recently returned from Stanford. The affair was in honor of Miss Helen Campbell, a Stanford student and house guest of Miss Horton. May baskets were used in decorating the veranda and tea was served on the lawn under the acacia trees. Among those assisting were Mmes. Thomas Snowdon Tompkins, J. E. MacMillan, Albert G. Thurston, Misses Helen Goeghan and Katharine Wright.

The members of the Valley Hunt Club and their non-resident friends will enjoy a vaudeville performance at the clubhouse, Saturday evening, May 29, and the next club entertainment will be a theater party, June 12, when the club will charter private cars and attend the Belasco. Supper will be served on the cars on the return trip. One of the anticipated entertainments in the near future at the Valley Hunt Club will be amateur theatricals to which special interest will attach from the fact that the comedy, to be presented, entitled "Tourists and Tourneys," has been written by one of the members of the club. This is a comedy in three acts, the scene laid at Hotel Green and is the maiden effort of the society man who has produced it.

MINISTER DIES.

Rev. Henry A. Cooke, a beloved veteran of the Baptist ministry, died at Cambridge, Mass., yesterday afternoon. Nowhere will the news be received with greater sorrow and regret than at Pasadena, where he was as well known and loved as he was in and about Boston.

Since 1891 the minister and his wife spent their winter here, where he was greeted by the school children, who came in crowds to the train bearing tributes of flowers on the occasion of each arrival. They did the same upon departure. These events were bright spots in the aged minister's latter days, and he never tired of telling of them.

Dr. Cooke died of old age and leaves a widow. He was 84 years old, and up to his last illness devoted much of his leisure time to intimate talks on American poets. His address on the life of Henry W. Longfellow, delivered shortly after the poet's death, was regarded as one of the finest eulogies ever spoken of Longfellow.

ARROYO DRIVE UNDER WAY.

Mayor Earley states that with the satisfactory settlement of the Arroyo Drive right of way through the properties of Warden and Perkins settled, the improvement of the scenic thoroughfare as a whole will be taken up at once and forced to a completion if possible before the rainy season comes on. A gang of men will be put to work today at the foot of Madelain Drive, cleaning out the underbrush and trees that block the way of the road as staked out by L. W. Green.

The City Engineer will at once prepare plats of the route selected, and bids will be prepared for the work. The drive will be 50 feet in width, with a 30-foot macadam highway extending from the south city limits to Colorado street. It is the intention to park it entire on the east side, but there will be no park on the west side, as it is believed that a parking would detract from the natural wild beauty of the Arroyo Seco, and as people driving along the thoroughfare desire to get as near the edge as possible in order that they may see into the bed of the Arroyo.

NEWS NOTES.

STREET PAVING TO BE HURRIED.

SAN BERNARDINO CLUBS BUSY WITH PLANS.

Private Contracts to Be Let for Several Miles of Modern Road Work—Mayor McNabb Makes Personal Study of the Needs of the City Along This Line.

SAN BERNARDINO, May 23.—That San Bernardino is wide awake is evident from the organization of neighborhood clubs about town to discuss street paving. The indications are that before the summer is well along private contracts will be let for several miles of modern road work. Mayor McNabb is making a personal study of the needs of the city along this line, and for the past week has devoted several hours each day to make a personal inspection of the soils along the different streets. He his in charge now a petition for paving Fourth street, which will probably be the first treated along modern lines under private contract. The property owners along G, F and E streets are also well along with their plans, and D street is aroused. Estimates are that within the year there will be more public improvements of this sort done under private contract than the city is now engaged on under the bond issue.

ARMY WORM APPEARS.

The army worm has appeared in various sections of the valley and county, in some localities having stripped the vegetation from vines and shrubs. The horticultural authorities here sent out notices advising localities troubled to sprinkle Paris green or arsenic of lead on the foliage, or spread fresh vegetable leaves on bran mash poisoned with arsenical preparation on the ground between the vegetable rows, and the worms devouring this will quickly die. Emphasis is placed upon the necessity for clearing out all weeds on vacant lots and elsewhere, for in these the worms multiply.

ARROWHEAD ARRIVALS.

Among the arrivals at the Arrowhead Hot Springs Hotel today are Mr. and Mrs. A. W. Chaffey and nurse of Los Angeles; A. B. Sharp, Redlands; S. T. Catey, Los Angeles; Mrs. W. E. Rollins and daughter, Los Angeles; Charles Lee King, Pasadena; A. V. Van Cotter, New York.

HONOR DEAD COMRADE.

Funeral of Maj. Graham at Soldiers' Home Attended by Many of His Former Fellow-Workmen.

SOLDIERS' HOME, May 23.—Followed by many of his friends, the body of Maj. W. D. Graham, resting on the regulation gun carriage, was borne away to the Home cemetery this afternoon. The funeral in the mortuary chapel was attended by many of the members of the Home, a large number of Graham's former associates employed on the Los Angeles Times and others who had known him socially.

In the service, which was military in character, Chaplain George W. Wilson officiated. Among the floral tributes was a "Gates Ajar" from Graham's former fellow-workmen of The Times. This piece was five feet high and was composed of sweet peas resting on a bed of roses. Pendent from the arch were the figures "30" in pink peas, the symbol of the "typos" for "finished."

Another piece from employés of The Times was a wreath on a stand, the base being of white carnations. Other testimonials of esteem were a pillow of carnations from Miss Saunders, a large wreath of laurel and thistle bloom from John and Thomas Davis and a wreath of carnations from Mrs. G. W. Dryden of Los Angeles.

TROPICO.

TROPICO, May 23.—Late last night an unknown man was found hiding in Mr. Dutton's home in this city. He was discovered by Mr. Dutton's two sons and a Mr. Jones, who were returning with Mr. Dutton from a visit to Los Angeles. Hearing a noise on the back screen porch, Mr. Jones started to investigate. The intruder made a rush for the door. Mr. Jones whipped out his revolver and fired three shots after the fleeing person, but to no purpose, as the burglar escaped. It is supposed by many that this person is the same one who has been operating in this district for the past month.

LONG BEACH.

LIVELY SESSION IS PROBABLE.

IMPORTANT MATTERS TO COME BEFORE COUNCIL.

Today, Proposed Substitute Liquor Ordinance Will Be Considered—If Adopted, May Solve Hotel Virginia's Trouble—Purchase of Inner Harbor Frontage Mooted.

LONG BEACH, May 23.—Tomorrow's session of the City Council promises to be an extremely interesting and lively one. First of all will be considered the proposed substitute for the liquor ordinance, which is violently opposed by the Prohibitionists as letting down the bars, while it is favored by the liberal element, including even many of the anti-saloon leaguers.

The new ordinance simply eliminates from the old one that feature which prohibits a citizen from having liquors in his own house and using them therein. Incidentally, this will, in a measure, solve the Hotel Virginia trouble, as it would enable guests to purchase their own wines and have them served at meals.

There are four votes pledged to the measure, but in case the Mayor should veto, it is doubtful if the necessary extra vote would be forthcoming.

Another important measure that will come up is the calling of an election to vote on a $250,000 bond issue for the purchase of municipal water frontage on the inner harbor. It is conceded that the fate of this election depends, in a measure, on the action of the Mayor relative to the liquor ordinance.

A third important matter will be the presentation of an ordinance fixing the gas rate at $1 per 1000. The two local companies announce that, beginning June 1, they will raise the price to $1.25 per 1000. This aroused violent opposition among the citizens, who have petitioned the Council to fix the rate.

MRS. STARR INJURED.

Mrs. E. J. Starr was thrown from an automobile this afternoon and severely injured. Mr. and Mrs. Starr were driving on American avenue at a rapid rate when some children ran into the street. To avoid them, Starr made a quick turn, and ran his machine into the curbing. A wheel was broken and Mrs. Starr hurled to the pavement. She was rendered unconscious, but no bones were broken.

The Sons of St. George have elected these officers: President, Richard Prinz; Vice-President, W. H. Evens; Secretary, W. P. Swinton; Messenger, George Hird; Treasurer, A. Crew; Chaplain, R. B. Gooden; Physician, Dr. E. C. Bates; Trustees, R. I. Bostock, Charles Morris; Representative to Grand Lodge, R. I. Bostock.

COMPLETION DELAYED.

Owing to unforeseen delays in securing material it is stated that the completion of the new $150,000 Methodist Church will not be completed until July.

Practical gardening, instead of the studying of text-books, has been in vogue this year at the Daisy-avenue grammar school and prizes for the best-kept gardens have been awarded to Lillian McCauley, Dorothy Day, Helen Throde, Walter McKune, Morgan Lapher and Homer Clemmer.

The First Christian Church has received permission to mortgage its property on the corner of Fourth and Locust, and has secured a loan of $15,000 for five years at 9 per cent. from the German-American Savings Bank of Los Angeles.

BEACH SEASON OPENS.

The beach season has opened, and today 10,000 visitors enjoyed themselves on the sands. Hundreds took plunges in the surf and trips on launches. Jean Savage made a pretty balloon ascension and parachute jump, alighting safely north of town. The Pike concession did a rushing business and crowds listened to the concert by the municipal band.

Mrs. Clara May Keller died this morning at the home of her parents on View street. She was a widow and 44 years of age.

The wedding was a complete surprise to their friends, and the secret was not out until Mr. Bagby rented a house at No. 1041 North Fair Oaks avenue day before yesterday.

AVALON IMPROVEMENTS.

Additions Designed to Increase Attractions of the Famous Catalina Island Resort.

AVALON, May 23.—"Improvements now being made are designed to convert this port into one of the foremost winter and summer resorts on the Pacific Coast," said A. A. Carraher, secretary of the Freeholders' Improvement Association, today. "With its new wharf, boating facilities will be second to none, and the calmness of the bay will render bathing in the vicinity of the new bath-house one of the most pleasureable features of interest to visitors. This season we anticipate a greater number of visitors than ever before. Last year over 100,000 came here. The amphitheater has been enlarged, and the Marine Band is expected about June 19. The free camping ground provided by the Santa Catalina Island Company is a step in the right direction. Twenty-five acres have been denuded of cactus and other small shrubs to provide for guests. Electric light and water will be furnished at half the rates charged last season. Back of the golf links is a fifteen-acre natural park, planted with wild cherry, palms and eucalyptus. Free camping facilities will also be allowed at Pebble Beach."

Chief among the improvements now taking place is the erection of a $30,000 bath-house. Designed in the modified colonial style of architecture, by C. H. Brown of Los Angeles, who planned the recent additions to the Hotel Metropole, the building will no doubt be one of the city's handsomest edifices. Piles which will allow for over one acre of floor space have been driven into the sand. The building will be 165x120 feet. The structure will be one-story, with a roof terrace, and will have upon three sides a sixteen-foot piazza, enabling spectators as well as bathers to have an unobstructed view of the entire bay.

On the outside of the building will be toboggan slides, spring-boards, high-diving platforms, and other contrivances. Inside will be 165 dressing-rooms, thirty enamel bath tubs, hot and cold shower sprays, Turkish bath-rooms, manicure parlors and "cooling off" rooms. A cement sidewalk will be put in from the Aquarium building, past the bath-house, to the Tuna Club.

The rough lumber for the outside of the building has been brought from the Isthmus. At a mill which has been erected for the purpose of preparing this $5000 worth of machinery has been installed, and two shifts of men are working day and night dressing and cutting the pieces to proper length and shape. The contract was given to Alexander Grant of Los Angeles.

Anty Drudge Advises Another Housewife

Mrs. Housewife—"Mrs. Busybody called after dinner yesterday. She invariably comes after dinner and it is so aggravating when you have a big wash in the boiler on the fire. I didn't have time to prepare anything nice for her. And she'll go around telling everybody what a mean table I set."

Anty Drudge—"She's a regular 'after-dinner' caller, all right. Dinner is what she is after. But why don't you try Fels-Naptha? You would have your wash all through—and dinner, too, before she got here. But be sure to follow the directions."

Do you make your head save your hands? The woman who does has the easiest time. Do a little thinking. With Fels-Naptha soap you can wash clothes in cold or lukewarm water in about half the time it takes by the old-fashioned boiling, hard-rubbing way. It's easier on the clothes, easier on you, saves fuel, time and bother. Then the clothes are cleaner and sweeter than you can get them in any other way.

One cake of Fels-Naptha will prove this to you next washday. Be sure to follow directions on the red and green wrapper.

Sometimes, women use ordinary soap for washing painted wood-work, floors, linoleum, oil-cloth, dishes and kitchen utensils, because they think it is cheaper than Fels-Naptha. They do not consider the results or extra amount of work they have to do with ordinary soaps as compared with Fels-Naptha.

BRAIN DISTORTED.

TRIES TO TORTURE A WOMAN TO DEATH.

Educated Indian of San Bernardino Builds Sacrificial Fire Before Creole Victim and Carves Strange Hieroglyphics on Her Breast.

SAN BERNARDINO, May 23.—Frank Lugo, an educated Indian, is a fugitive from justice, and his paramour, Miss Gladys Wilkerson, a creole, occupies a cot at the County Hospital, dying of a dozen or more knife wounds, inflicted by Lugo, who under the influence of liquor, his brain distorted into the belief that the woman was his merely for human sacrifice, and decided to torture her to death.

The alleged assault occurred shortly before 6 o'clock this morning. The two had been spending the night with the wine cups, and shortly after midnight Lugo informed the creole that the great spirit had instructed him to let her blood flow. She made an effort to escape, but he struck her down with a chair. Taking the unconscious form into his arms he is supposed to have placed it in a corner, built a sacrificial fire close by, and then commenced a series of tortures.

When the woman recovered consciousness she found herself saturated with blood, flowing from innumerable knife scratches and deep wounds, the fiend having literally covered her breast with strange hieroglyphics.

Women residing in an adjoining house were attracted by the woman's groans. Lugo has disappeared. He has for years been employed about the orange groves of Highland, and heretofore bore a good reputation.

CHINESE STUDENTS IN AMERICA.

BY WALTER J. BALLARD.

To the University of California belongs the credit of the first organization of Chinese students in America. This was in 1901, when some of the Chinese students attending the university organized and gave their association the name of the Chinese Students' Alliance of America. The association included originally students from all parts of the United States. But within the last few years, says Bulletin 30 of the United States Bureau of Education, the great increase in their number particularly in the Eastern States has made it possible to have two organizations, an eastern and a western. The eastern branch, known as the Chinese Students' Alliance of the Eastern States, is now the larger, counting in all about 300 members. The western branch, known as the Pacific Coast Chinese Students' Association, has about 100 members. So far these two associations have not been constituted a part of the World's Chinese Students' Federation, the great national organization of China, with its headquarters in Shanghai.

The alliance in the Eastern States publishes the Chinese Students' Monthly, a magazine in English, and the Chinese Students' Annual, in Chinese. The object sought is to unite all Chinese students on the broad, general ground of patriotism (a quality sadly lacking in China, report touches).

Local activity in the Eastern States is confined to the clubs of the different colleges where Chinese students are in attendance. These are clubs or associations in New Haven, Amherst, Illinois, Chicago, Wisconsin, Cornell, Pennsylvania, Columbia, Michigan, and a general club for Massachusetts.

T. Y. Chang, 1907, California, says: "For higher education America furnishes the Chinese youths the best chance. According to a recent Chinese statistical publication the number of Chinese students in American universities is greater than in any other western country. These Chinese students in America are much more valuable to China than American students to America, the demand for their services being so great. China today needs men of higher education. She needs engineers to build her railroads and to open up her mines. She needs mechanics and chemists to supervise her factories; and she needs lawyers and economists to make her new laws and to direct her financial policies. Now, American universities, especially the University of California, attract Chinese students much more than European universities. They can find friends of their own nationality in America much more easily than in Europe. American educated Chinese will be a huge bridge across the Pacific Ocean between America and China, over which American civilization travels. They will be a marvelous means of transporting American ideas to and distributing them through the vast kingdom. They will be able to insure a peace and trade in the Far East that treaties and military forces can not insure. In one word, these students will be the most natural medium and most effective instruments through and with which American civilization, or rather American university education, can exert its wonderful influence on the new China."

In November, 1908, there were 155 Chinese students at American institutions, on foundations provided by either the imperial or provincial governments of China, quotes Dr. Elmer Ellsworth Brown, United States Commissioner of Education.

The Chinese Young Men's Christian Association and the Chinese Young Women's Christian Association are fostering the educational movement as fast as circumstances permit, says John Fryer (who prepared the bulletin herein under review) Professor of Oriental Languages and Literature, University of California, who was for thirty-five years the holder of important official positions under the Chinese imperial government and the author and editor of a large number of important works in the Chinese language.

Prof. Fryer says: "The conservation which characterized Chinese national education in past centuries seems to have disappeared. In its place there is what may almost be called a 'wild craze' for western learning pervading all classes of society.

"Every year is certain to find an increasing number of young people the flower of the eighteen provinces of China, desirous of wending their way to 'the beautiful country' or to the country of the 'flowery flag' as they call the United States. For many reasons, America is the favorite country for Chinese students."

LONDON WEATHER.

Sunshine So Scarce It Is Measured and Careful Account Kept of the Clear Days.

[Exchange.] In London, the land of fog, smoke, dirt and soot, sunshine is so rare and so valuable that it is counted, weighed and measured. The results of this scientific treatment are served up to the waiting people in the newspapers from time to time.

For instance, a few days ago, after three days of acquaintance with the sun's rays—a rare phenomenon in this city—one of the papers announced that this particular portion of the globe had enjoyed 785,000 square miles of sunshine. Just how these figures were arrived at it is hard to say, but the telegraph lines from all over the country have been busy recording the "surprising" absence of fog, mist and smoke.

Londoners will probably tell their grandchildren in years to come of the first week in April, 1909, for it is said that during that time the city had sixty hours of sunshine. Just what that means to the inhabitants will be realized when it is said that the corresponding week of last year was considered exceptionally fine, when we saw the sun for only thirty hours. In 1907 twenty hours was the record.

The weather is always the chief topic of conversation in England. One meets with endless weather observations on the 'buses, in the barber's chair, in the office and at one's restaurant. It is the almost invariable way of opening a conversation. But in the last few days Londoners have outdone themselves in this respect. The coming German invasion, the budget, the maintenance of the two-power standard and even the result of the Oxford and Cambridge boat race have all had to take back seats in one's list of topics of conversation. Usually the tone is one of pleasant anticipation, and the question, "When is the rain going to stop?" Now the tone is one of moody pessimism, and the question, "The sunshine surely can't last much longer?"

As a sample of what is to be expected in London, take the dreary month of March. Of the thirty-one days, twenty-six were rainy and the sun was visible during only fifty-seven hours.

RAPS INDIAN SCHOOL PLAN.

Commissioner Would Abandon Present Idea.

Says Nation Owes Nothing to the Redmen.

Suggests States Take Over Government Plants.

[SPECIAL CORRESPONDENCE OF THE TIMES.]

PHOENIX (Ariz.) May 21.—Indian Commissioner Francis E. Leupp has stated while here, that he believed the existence of non-reservation schools such as that near Phoenix would be terminated before many years. He seemed to believe that the government had no reason to continue the gratuitous higher education of any one race of people.

"Public sentiment," he said, "has been stimulated to believe or think we owe some education to the Indians, they having been the first inhabitants of this country. My recommendation to Congress for the disposition of non-reservation schools has been for the government to offer to the State in which one of these schools is situated the whole plant just as it stands, as a gift from the United States, with the proviso that it shall be continued as an educational institution, and that any Indian can always have his tuition free there.

"This has been done in Colorado, where the State has taken two of our schools from us. We are in process of putting the same arrangement through elsewhere, Arizona will probably be given a chance to acquire the Phoenix Indian School whenever it is to be disposed of."

Mr Leupp believes in the practical education of the Indian and in mixing him with the whites, in his education. At Sacaton, the headquarters of the Pima reservation, experiments are being made in the raising of Egyptian cotton, Burmuda onions and various other products deemed suitable for the Southwest.

Much attention was given by Mr. Leupp to trachoma, which has appeared among the Indians of the Southwest. He stated that it had been found, however, almost generally among the lower class of Mexicans, and intimated that it had probably been imported from Mexico. He urged that proper remedial measures be taken by the public health officers. The disease is very general in the United States, particularly in the poor foreign quarters of the large cities. The strongest measures are being taken to eradicate it among the Indians, as it has been proven that cures can be made. The specific germ of trachoma, however, has never been segregated, though the disease is regarded by medical authorities as highly infectious.

TIME LIMIT ON WORK.

A report to the effect that when the Southern Pacific Company took over from the Santa Fé the railroad line from Phoenix to Winkleman it did so under an agreement that the road should be finished through to San Carlos by the first of next year is current here. It is believed that the road can hardly be finished in that time, but there are indications that very active work is about to begin on this important cut-off. Less than thirty miles remain to be graded from Christmas eastward, but this strip is one of the most difficult ever encountered by the railroad builder.

The Glendale beet-sugar factory is to start operations June 14. Of the earlier plantings, 1500 acres are declared by Manager Davie to be as fine beets as every seen anywhere in the country. The later plantings are not in nearly as good shape, owing to the shorter growing period and to the scarcity of water experienced lately. Some of the early plantings will run up as high as twenty tons to the acre, with better than 15 per cent. of sugar. The acreage this year is about 5000.

The company has spent $250,000 in perfecting the plant, which had before that time been considered complete. It has developed an abundance of water from wells, thus avoiding recourse to ditch water, as was necessary several years ago in the experimental run made by the builders of the factory.

WATER IN ABUNDANCE.

More than three feet of water is going over the Roosevelt dam, and about 30,000 inches of flow now is available at the head of the Salt River Valley water system, an ample amount for the irrigation of the fields which have been parching for several weeks.

A number of residents of Mesa have settled upon land in the vicinity of Queen Creek on the Phoenix and Eastern Railroad, southeast of Mesa, where a large and very fertile body of land is available, though necessarily out of reach of the canals of the Salt River irrigation project. It had been hoped that the government might dam Queen Creek where it leaves the Superstition Mountains, but this is no whelieved impracticable, and the settlers are preparing to irrigate by means of pumping from wells, for which it is hoped to secure electric power from the government at low cost.

SHIPPING APRICOTS.

The apricot season is well under way at the present time, large quantities of Newcastles being shipped by express.

J. C. Adams of the Arizona Fair Commission has an idea of advertising the coming fair by the greatest stake race ever trotted in the West, for at least $10,000, and possibly $20,000, divided between the trotters and pacers. It is believed that the necessary money can be raised readily from the mines, on condition that the race be known as the "Copper Stake."

Plans are being made for the establishment near Phoenix of a modern packing plant, in which all waste products are to be utilized and where fertilizer will be made for the orange growers of the valley.

P. D. Brown, the Phoenix broker, whose disappearance has been widely celebrated, has turned up in Prescott, where, he says, he is simply taking a vacation.

A petition has been circulated in Phoenix, asking segregation of the negro children in the public schools.

Judge E. W. Lewis, lately confirmed as Associate Justice of the Supreme Court of Arizona, states that he will open a special term of court in Globe next Wednesday, and on the following Wednesday will start a special term at Solomonville, where the court calendar is badly congested.

The cadet company of the Normal School of Arizona at Tempe is now encamped near the military target range on Salt River, north of Tempe.

JOHN L. INDIGNANT.

John L. Sullivan, who is filling an engagement on the stage of a local 10-cent theater, was moved to indignation yesterday by a telegram from a New York paper, asking details of his marriage of Mrs. Charles Johnson, [illegible]

"I want to state positively I am not married, and that I met Mrs. Johnson only twice in my life, the last time being fifteen years ago."

C. E. and H. P. Delland have sold their controlling interest in the Phoenix Flour Mills for $100,000, to a local company headed by Territorial Treasurer E. E. Kirkland.

The City Council has made the following reappointments to municipal positions: City Attorney, T. J. Prescott; Superintendent of Streets, G. H. Carr; superintendent water department, R. A. Craig.

Former Residents of Indiana Gather in Eagle Rock Valley Where Boyhood Pranks, Including the Sounding of the Grass Whistle, Are in Order—Flavor of the Middle West.

"Oh, say, are you from Indiana, too?"

This was heard yesterday at the Indiana picnic and the man who asked it was greeting a friend of twenty-five years' standing. Their acquaintance began in London.

They were not the only ones who developed an unexpected Hoosier origin yesterday, for nearly all the peanut and "cornucopia" stands at the end of the Eagle Rock-avenue car line, where the Hoosiers were celebrating, had "Hoosier" emblems displayed all over them.

Judging from the crowd that "buzzed" over the hills there are quite a few people from Indiana. Between 300 and 400 persons registered in the book provided for that purpose and all came early and remained late, for the Eagle Rock Valley is picturesque and offers many opportunities for reversion to boyhood pranks. One staid householder was reminded by a blade of grass of a boyish amusement greatly in vogue back in "ol' Cass county," and promptly made a whistle and "tooted" all day.

Other music was supplied by the Veteran Fife and Drum Corps and they portrayed with the shrill fife and the hysterical drum the 280,000 men who left the Hoosier State to "mix with the Gray" in '62. Following that the Palmer family complimented their adopted State with mandolin and guitar music.

In the afternoon, when the crowd began to regather at the picnic grounds, President McClain stood on a bench and introduced Col. Nathan Fitzgerald, and the colonel got up on the same bench and made a speech.

Col. Fitzgerald hails from Indianapolis. He voiced a complaint of long standing, to wit, that he left Indiana and spent much time and more money in attempting to get away from Indianans and couldn't do it. He went to Cairo and an Indianapolis acquaintance came out of a bazaar and wanted to sell him a rug, which incident caused him to negotiate the 420 feet to the top of the great pyramid. When he got to the top he discovered a man named McCord, also from the same place.

Then he went to Joppa and while inspecting the reputed hole in the roof through which a man was lowered to be healed by Christ, he was accosted by a woman correspondent of an Indianapolis paper. Then in despair he came to Los Angeles—and wound up in the Indiana picnic.

When the colonel got through talking he retired from the bench and President McClain heaved a sigh of relief and remarked: "Now I'm it."

The next meeting of the Indiana Society will be held in Fraternal Brotherhood Hall on Tuesday.

WANT WAY BROAD.

Moneta-avenue Improvement Association Elects Officers—Progress for Widening.

The Moneta Avenue Improvement Association, which is working for the widening of that thoroughfare to 100 feet and for paving and lighting it all the way through to the sea, has elected officers. They are: W. H. O'Connell, president; John G. Zobelein, first vice-president; J. G. Ingham, second vice-president; George Graham, third vice-president; L. W. Harmon, secretary; Dr. T. C. Myers, treasurer; William H. Hubbell, publicity.

The work of signing petitions for the widening from Slauson avenue south to Manchester avenue is practically spontaneous. The present 100-foot widening task of the association involves eight miles of street from the junction of Moneta avenue and Main street at Thirty-seventh street—directly south to Rosecrans avenue—connecting with the Burlingame-avenue boulevard south to San Pedro Harbor.

On the north this project will connect with the 100-foot widening of Main street north to Tenth and Broadway, making a total of thirteen miles of street 100 feet wide, running due south, of which the first five miles are now in course of condemnation in the Superior Court.

The next meeting of the association will be held Friday evening at the corner of Moneta avenue and Sixty-first street.

Trade That Pays.

Young men to learn to operate the linotype machine; a good trade that pays above the average. The Mergenthaler Linotype Company is installing over 100 linotype machines per month. That means just so many positions to be filled at good wages.

The Los Angeles Times has installed a large auxiliary plant, to be used in case of fire or accident, and has placed in charge an expert machinist and operator, making it possible for students who so desire to learn either trade (linotype machinist or operator) in from three to six months. For terms address THE TIMES-MIRROR COMPANY, or 'phone Main 8200, Home 10000, and ask for manager of the Linotype School.
